Triumph of the Communists at the Paris Election—Revolutionary Marching Out in Other Towns—The Government Threatens to be Removed—Due D'Aumale the Probable Successor of Thiers—Movements of Prominent Officers.

LONDON, March 27.—The Daily News has a special dispatch from Paris stating that the elections passed off quietly, and resulted in an overwhelming Communist majority. The revolutionary authority is completely dominant.

The abdication of Admiral SAISSET and the Mayors increases the success of the revolution, which, within a week, will spread to all the large towns, and render the position of the Government in the rural districts untenable.

The Telegraph's special correspondent at Versailles reports that the Government has ordered the prompt arrest of Gen. GARIBALDI upon his appearance on French soil. Gen. LE FLO retires from the Ministry of War, and will be succeeded by Gen. CHANZY, a returned prisoner from Germany. It is generally thought the Government is defeated, and a rumor is current that M. THIERS will be forced to resign, and be succeeded by the Duc D'AUMALE. M. THIERS is credited with the remark to his friends that when the Government has 100,000 troops in which it can trust, an attack will be made upon Paris.

It is believed the capital will be removed to Tours.

The Daily News' special dispatch from Brussels says that Marshal BAZAINE is about to leave for France, and that Marshal LE BŒUF will go to the Hague.

LONDON, March 27—9 o'clock P. M.—Gen. FAIDHERBE has been summoned to Versailles.

A Call for Volunteers—The New Government Proclaimed at Lyons—Gen. Leblois Intends—Advance of the Prussian Outposts—A Light Vote at the Paris Election.

VERSAILLES, March 27.—The Minister of War has notified the Prefects to raise a battalion of Mobilized volunteers in each of the departments, in pursuance of the law which has just passed the National Assembly. These volunteers are to be forwarded to Versailles immediately, and are to receive daily one and a half francs, their officers to be appointed by the Minister of War.

The Debats says that Gen. LULLIER is insane, and is cared for by his colleagues of the Central Committee.

The insurgents have seized a gun-boat in the Seine, capturing the crew and some unimportant documents.

The Official Journal of the Committee announces that eighteen battalions of the National Guard out of the twenty-four organized in Lyons, support the Commune. The new Government had been proclaimed there without bloodshed.

The Prussian outposts have been advanced to Vincennes.

The insurrectionary Central Committee has extorted from some of the supporters of the Committee of Order a full and exact list of the members of that organization.

Result of the Paris Election—A Division Among the Montmartrists—Position of the German Commander—Movements of Troops.

PARIS, Monday, March 27—1 P. M.—The result of the elections is now known. The candidates of the Central Republican Committee have been elected in all the arrondissements except the first, second and seventh, where the vote stands as follows:

First Arrondissement.—The number of voters registered, 22,500; number of votes cast, 11,054, of which the committee's candidates polled 3,600.

Second Arrondissement.—Number registered, 22,853; votes cast, 21,180; committee polled 4,000.

Seventh Arrondissement.—Number registered, 23,092; votes cast, 5,175; old officers re-elected.

The aggregate vote was very light.

The Journal de Paris estimates the number of qualified electors who abstained from voting at 250,000.

Opinion with regard to the election in the Montmartre and Belleville districts was divided. Some of the insurgents, considering the Committee reactionary, refused to vote, and continued to keep guard over their cannon. Others, more peacefully inclined, attended the polls and voted for what they believed to be a compromise.

The city continues to be tranquil.

The reports of the spreading of the insurrection in Algeria are confirmed.

It is reported here that the negotiations for peace will open at Brussels to-morrow.

BERLIN, March 27.—The message sent into Paris by Gen. SCHLOTTEIN, commanding the German troops at St. Denis, is passive and peaceful in tone, but shows no friendliness for the insurgents.

Movements of troops have been going on lately with much activity in various parts of France, but they are strictly in accordance with the preliminary stipulations of peace.

GENERAL EUROPEAN NEWS.

Preparing for the Final Treaty of Peace Between France and Germany—Demmandet of the Army of Occupation—Authority of the German Executive to be Enforced in Alsace and Lorraine.

BRUSSELS, March 27.—The negotiations for the final treaty of peace between France and Germany will soon commence. MM. DE CHAUDORD and GOULARD, the Plenipotentiaries of France, arrived here today, and it is expected that the first sitting of the representatives of both Governments will be held this week. The French Embassy is the place agreed upon for the meetings.

BERLIN, March 27.—The Prussian Cross Gazette says Baron VON GERCOTT was recalled from Washington at his own request.

Gen. VOIGHT-RHETZ commands the German Army of occupation in France in the absence of Prince FREDERICK CHARLES.

A bill will be introduced in the Federal Parliament for the incorporation of Alsace and Lorraine under the government of the Emperor. It provides that the German Constitution will be enforced as the law of the land from the 1st of January, 1872. No mention is made of ceding a portion of the acquired territory to Bavaria.

Visit of Napoleon to Queen Victoria—He is Cordially Welcomed at Windsor—Officers of the Spanish Carlist Army of the King of Sweden.

LONDON, March 27.—The Emperor NAPOLEON visited Windsor Castle today, and remained an hour with Queen VICTORIA and family. An address of welcome was made by Lord SYDNEY. Marshal CANROBERT's children were also present. The castle grounds were filled with a great crowd of people, who cheered the Ex-Emperor heartily. The revolt in Algeria is spreading.

MADRID, March 26.—Don BALDOMERO ESPARTERO, Duke of Victoria, will probably be chosen President of the Spanish Senate, and Don SALUSTIANO OLOZAGA President of the Chamber of Deputies.....A Republican band has made its appearance in the Province of Lerida.

LONDON, March 27.—The King of Sweden is suffering from a relapse of his recent sickness. The Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark have gone to visit him.

Matters in the British Parliament—The Commons Object to Marriages with Deceased Wives' Sisters—Great Reform Scene—The Naval Estimates.

LONDON, March 27.—In the House of Lords to-night, the bill legalizing marriage with deceased wife's sister, previously passed by the House of Commons, came up for final disposition. After a long debate, in which Lord PENZANCE argued strongly in its favor, the bill was rejected. In the House of Commons Lord ENFIELD stated that the Spanish Government on Saturday paid, at the British Legation in Madrid, the sum demanded as indemnity to the crew of the Tornado. Debate arose on the coast defenses, during which members of naval and military experience declared a preference for flotillas of gun-boats over other methods of defense. Mr. GOSCHEN introduced, and proceeded to explain and justify, the naval estimates. He observed, after a recapitulation of the figures, that the dock-yards and navy of England were strong enough to defend her commerce and soil. The statements of Mr. GOSCHEN gave great satisfaction to the House, and were received with cheers.

The Duc D'Aumale.

There is a rumor that M. THIERS will be forced to resign the Presidency of the French Republic, and that HENRI EUGENE PHILIPPE LOUIS D'ORLEANS, Duc D'AUMALE, will be his successor. This nobleman is the fourth son of LOUIS PHILIPPE, formerly King of France, and was born on the 16th of January, 1822. He was educated at the College Henri IV., at Paris, and when seventeen years of age entered the army. He accompanied his brother, the Duke of ORLEANS, to Algeria in 1840, and served there during the campaign which followed. He returned to France in 1841 and completed his military education at Courbevoie. In 1841-3 he was in Algeria again at the head of the subdivision of Medeah, where he conducted one of the most brilliant campaigns of the war. It was during this campaign that he captured the camp of ABD-EL-KADER, with 3,000 prisoners, a large amount of treasure and a valuable correspondence, for which service he was made a Lieutenant-General and appointed to the command of the Province of Constantine. In 1844 he directed the expedition against BISKRA, and in 1847 succeeded Marshal BUGEAUD as Governor-General of Algeria, a position which he occupied till the surrender of ABD-EL-KADER. On the breaking out of the revolution of '48, which drove his father from the throne of France, he resigned his command to Gen. CAVAIGNAC, and joined his exiled family in England. He united with his brother, the Prince DE JOINVILLE, in a protest against the decree which banished his family from France; but soon after settled down to literary pursuits, dividing his time between a beautiful villa at Twickenham and a fine estate in Worcestershire, on which he has amused himself with practical agriculture. He had an ample fortune, being heir to the ancient house of CONDE, and was thus enabled to spend his years of banishment from public life in elegance and affluence. In 1861 the Duke addressed a pamphlet to Prince NAPOLEON BONAPARTE, which excited much attention. The prosecution of the printer and publisher of this tract caused the Duc to challenge the Prince NAPOLEON, and the refusal of the latter to meet him occasioned no little comment. The Duc D'Aumale married Marie Caroline Auguste de Bourbon, daughter of Prince Leopold of Salerno, in 1844. His oldest son, Louis Philippe Marie Leopold d'Orleans, Prince de Condé, was born in 1845, and died in 1866. His second son, François Louis Marie Philippe d'Orleans, Duke of Guise, was born in 1844.

Frightful Massacre of Americans by Indians.

Correspondence of the St. Louis Republican.

LA MESILLA, N. M., March 12.—It is reported here that a party of eight Americans—seven men and one woman—were attacked by Apaches between Casas Grande and Garaland, Mexico, near the United States line. Six were killed on the spot, the woman among the number. Two who were on horseback, although lanced, made their escape; one, however, died before reaching Casas Grande. They had been traveling with a train, but at the time of the slaughter they were five miles in advance of the train.

Since writing the above the western stage has arrived, bringing confirmatory reports. The conductor also says that Mr. and Mrs. CHARLES KEEL, of Fort Bayard, were of the party—both killed. Mrs. KEEL was the daughter of Major RIXEL. It is further reported that the stage was attacked by Apaches between Tucson and Maricopa Wells, and that the driver is missing. The conductor reached Tucson badly wounded.

Yale and Harvard.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your article on Harvard and Yale, you give an impression that Harvard has done much more than Yale in erecting buildings for the accommodation of students. You state that Harvard has "built and is building three dormitories," thus giving the impression that Yale has done nothing, whereas Yale has finished one dormitory at a cost of $100,000, the gift of HENRY FARNAM, Esq., of this city, and has another one nearly finished at the same cost, the gift of Mr. DURFEE, of Fall River, Mass., beside erecting a very large building for the divinity students, including dormitory lecture-room, offices for the Professors, all combined in one building. Unless Harvard has done more than you state, it is not much ahead of Yale in what has been done of late. A READER.

Two Thousand People Crowded Into the Senate Chamber.

Senator Sumner's Great Speech—A Cold Reception—The President Charged With Being a Ku-klux Chief—An Instance of the Honorable Senator's Insolence—Secretary Robeson's Dispatch—Measures Maturing for Suppressing Southern Disorders.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—The galleries of the Senate Chamber were filled to their almost capacity before 12 o'clock today, and hundreds of people were crowded about the doors outside in the corridors anxiously watching for any opportunities which might occur to get within hearing, if not within sight, of the Massachusetts Senator. Mr. SUMNER came into the Chamber just before 12, and was greeted with some demonstrations of applause as he took his seat. During the reading of the journal the crowd continued to increase, and already the sofas and chairs on the floor were taken by those entitled to that privilege. The gallery allotted to the foreign legation was filled chiefly with domestic diplomats, whose diplomacy had overcome the venerable door-keeper of that sacred precinct. The reporters' gallery, in addition to its usual attendants, contained some who had gained entrance by the same influences which had crowded the diplomatic gallery, and besides a whole host of journalists unheard of except when, on the occasion of crowded galleries, by alleged connection with previously unheard-of newspapers, they secure the privileges and immunities of legitimate members of the fourth estate. Before Mr. SUMNER began his speech, Mr. FRYE called attention to the fact that hundreds of ladies were in the corridors out of hearing, and asked that they might be admitted to the cloak-rooms, and, if there was any precedent for it, to the floor itself. This last request was denied, but assent was given to their coming into the cloak-rooms, and immediately these rooms and the doors leading from them were taken possession of. So, when a minute or two after the quarter hour, Mr. SUMNER rose to begin the reading of his speech, there were doubtless within hearing of his voice near 2,000 people.

Mr. SUMNER first dilled into his resolutions, as originally offered, an additional one to strengthen a position discovered since Friday to be weak. The speech was, in the main, such a speech as the resolutions foreshadowed. The argument of the speech was precisely the argument of the resolutions. The facts in them affirmed were supported by evidence, or attempted to be, in it. The speech was characteristic, and like former efforts on the same subject, except that the invective and personalities were milder, the bitterness and disappointment of the speaker were not so well concealed. He wished he might have been spared the task of making this exposure, but he had been trained in the school of duty. He spoke for the Republican Party because he had always been its faithful servant. The kind of statesmanship and patriotism with which he confessed to have dealt with this subject, will somewhat surprise Herr BISMARCK, who is now so generally accepted as a pattern. He said he had had before him at first two questions: Is annexation good for us, and is it good for them? but he owned he had soon lost sight of the second query, and that he found himself entirely absorbed in the first. CABRAL himself, even if the patriot SUMNER represents him, could not be more devoted to the interests of the Dominicans. He applied his old epithet of usurper to HAYE, but in the case of Gen. BABCOCK, he omitted his former abuse, and ironically termed him a young missionary, changed to a commodore and afterward to a plenipotentiary. He termed Secretary FISH's reply to one of his resolutions of inquiry the confession of the State Department. He termed the visit of the Nipsic to several of the ports of San Domingo as "a war-breeding perambulation," a new figure certainly if not a good one. There was really no fact or theory in the speech not already before the country. It was merely a proclamation in the Senate of what he has been for a long time repeating privately and which has been telegraphed all over the country, that he had discovered what has been for a year and a half unknown, that our Government had been making bloodless war. It should not be left unnoticed that he left out, with what purpose may be imagined, of the speech as furnished to the Press in advance slips, some of the most objectionable and personal parts. For instance, he accused the President of neglecting affairs at home to carry out this annexation scheme, of using unprecedented persuasion and interference in the Senate to accomplish it, and spoke of him as putting himself at the head of a Ku-klux organization in San Domingo and encouraging the Ku-klux at the South by his example. [Mr. SUMNER's speech will be found on the second page of today's TIMES, in the regular report of the proceedings in Congress yesterday.]

The following is the most personal and resulting part of the speech in regard to the President. It was not in the printed copy sent out from here in advance to the Press, and was not added to the speech till today:

"How can we expect to put down the Ku-klux at the South, when we set in motion another Ku-klux, kindred in constant insubordination to law and constitution, differing in objects? The two are kindred in this insubordination—one striking at national life, and the other at individual life. One molests a people, the other a community. Let us see the common element, but it is difficult to see how we can condemn with proper reprobation our own domestic Ku-klux in its fearful outrages, while the President puts himself at the head of a powerful and costly Ku-klux, operating abroad in defiance of international law and the Constitution of the United States. These are questions which I ask with a sorrow not should I do otherwise than fail in justice to the occasion if I did not declare my unhesitating conviction that had the President been so inspired as to bestow upon the protection of Southern Unionists, white and black, one-half, nay Sir, one-quarter of the time, money, zeal, will, personal attention, personal effort, and personal intercession, which he has bestowed upon his attempt to obtain half an Island in the Caribbean Sea; our Southern Ku-klux would have existed in name only, while tranquillity reigned everywhere within our borders. [Demonstration of applause checked by the Chair.] Now, Sir, as I desire the suppression of the Ku-klux, and as I seek the elevation of the African race, I insist that the Presidential scheme which initiates a new form of Ku-klux on the coasts of San Domingo, and which at the same time insults the African race, represented in the black Republic, shall be arrested. I speak now against the Ku-klux on the coast of San Domingo, of which the President is the head, and I speak also for the African race, whom the President has trampled down. Is there any Senator in earnest against Ku-klux, let him arrest it on the coast of San Domingo. Is there any Senator ready at all times to seek the election of the African race, here is the occasion for his best efforts."

It was significant that as Mr. SUMNER sat down from his work not a Senator congratulated him on his speech. Not even Mr. SCHURZ, who sat next to him all the afternoon, offered him his hand upon the completion of his work of destruction. Seldom has such an audience been gathered to hear a great effort, and never before has the great effort been only such a mass of hollow sound as not to secure a single congratulatory response from a single brother Senator.

AN INSOLENT REBUKE.

Mr. SUMNER gave a striking example of his insolence and intolerance toward his brother Senators this afternoon. After he had been speaking nearly three hours and a half, and been listened to with the closest attention, he observed Senators EDMUNDS and CARPENTER conversing in whispers a few seats to his left. He stopped in his remarks before any one but himself had observed the Senators, and in a tone that was anything but polite, demanded that Senator EDMUNDS should speak lower or cease his conversation. This brought the Vice-President to his feet, who said that as the Senator from Massachusetts had demanded it in this instance, he would hereafter enforce the rule on every occasion, which requires that while Senators are speaking no other Senators shall indulge in conversation, read newspapers, &c. This will hit SUMNER harder than any one else, because he violates the rule oftener than any one else.

REPLIES TO MR. SUMNER.

Mr. MORTON took the floor when Mr. SUMNER had concluded, and spoke in a very forcible manner for about twenty minutes. He did so simply, he said, to call attention to the object of this speech, to the utter want of taste in this discussion, pending the return of the Commissioners, expected within the next six hours; to the apparent intention of the Senator to forestall their report, and to the fact that this violent speech had been in preparation for more than two months, and that its sole purpose was to degrade the President. Mr. MORTON then, in one brief statement, swept away the whole framework of Mr. SUMNER's vast effort upon which he has founded his arraignment of the President. He quoted from the same documents which Mr. SUMNER quoted from, facts and orders which that gentleman ignored or concealed, showing that the Government of Dominica and the Government of the United States, while in the exercise of their undoubted rights to negotiate on the subject of annexation, had become satisfied that Hayti was preparing, or had permitted to be prepared, expeditions from her territory for the avowed purpose of opposing the accomplishment of that negotiation; that thereupon this Government had notified Hayti that, pending these negotiations, she must not interfere for any such purpose. To Mr. SUMNER Senator MORTON then put this most pertinent inquiry: If any such oppression or interference as he had portrayed existed, where was the voice of Hayti? Why had not that Government protested? The fact that she had not was the all-sufficient answer to the infamed rhetoric of the Massachusetts Senator. Mr. HOWE followed Mr. MORTON in a vein of very keen satire, as he drew a picture of a long line of brilliant but utterly wrecked intellects from King SOLOMON down, by CICERO and CÆSAR, and PITT to SUMNER, which made the latter wince, as his vanity was puncture by the illustration. Mr. HOWE yielded for an adjournment, and it is understood that he will go on to-morrow, which will open the flood-gate of debate on this subject.

AN INDIRECT REPLY FROM SECRETARY ROBESON.

The published dispatch from Secretary ROBESON to Admiral LEE, regarding the action of our naval vessels in the waters of San Domingo, which appears this afternoon, excites considerable comment, answering and correcting incidentally, as it does, many of the most serious errors of Mr. SUMNER's speech. In explanation of Capt. TEMPLE's imprudent letter, it may be said that he, as well as all naval officers on that station, are strongly opposed to annexation. They object to stations in the tropics.

DEALING WITH THE KUKLUX.

The Select Committee of the House on the Ku-klux bill met this morning and again this afternoon to consider the various bills before them. The Democrats will of course oppose any bill, but the indications are that the majority of the Committee will take SHELLABARGER's bill for a basis, and add to it some of the features of the bills of Senators FRELINGHUYSEN and WILSON, which give the United States Courts exclusive jurisdiction of offenses arising under their provisions, and which provides also for the purging of juries of those who have been themselves engaged in such unlawful conspiracy. The Committee, it is understood, will not make any recommendation to the introduction of such a measure, but will rely upon their ability in debate to amend, and make it as unobjectionable as possible in their view, if they cannot defeat it.

UNFOUNDED RUMOR.

There is no truth in the rumor that Ex-Congressman STORES is to be appointed Fifth Auditor, in place of [illegible] D. BARON, Esq., of Wisconsin, the present incumbent. Mr. BARON is a very popular and capable officer. The only complaint made against him thus far is by some of his clerks, whose habits of elegant leisure in performance of their daily duties he has dispensed with.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

A DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS.

The Democratic members of Congress held a caucus to-night at the Capitol, continuing in session nearly four hours. They interchanged views on the subject of the bill prepared by the House Select Committee, and criticised its features. The statement was made in the course of the proceedings, which met with general assent, that most of the disturbances in the South were the result of the bad state of local government, while in not a few instances reports of violations of law, &c., were greatly exaggerated for political effect. The remedy, however, was not to be found in such Ku-klux measures as had been presented. It was incidentally stated that the relieving of men from their political and legal disabilities would tend to promote general tranquillity more than any other provision. The caucus also discussed the propriety of issuing an address to the people of the United States, and appointed a committee to report one at a future caucus.

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO THE NEW LOAN.

The subscriptions to the new loan today were $7,740,000, the total amounting to $40,000,000.

ARRIVAL OF THE SAN DOMINGO COMMISSIONERS.

The San Domingo Commissioners and the parties accompanying them returned to Washington this evening. All were well, with the exception of Ex-Senator WADE.

EX-COLLECTOR BAILEY'S DEFALCATION.

To correct erroneous impressions as to the amount of defalcation of J. S. BAILEY, late Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fourth and Thirty-second Districts of New-York, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue authorizes the statement that the actual cash defalcation reaches the sum of $129,643, made up of taxes collected and not deposited, collections from stamps not deposited, special deposit account with the Secretary of the Treasury, collections on spirits and tobacco unaccounted for, amount collected on account of store-keepers' salaries, and amount collected on account of gaugers' fees.

ATTITUDE OF THE GOVERNMENT

Could Members of the San Domingo Commission be Treated as Spies by Cabral—Secretary Robeson Defends the Position of the United States and Their Relations With the Dominican Republic—Genuineness of the Temple Letter.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—The following letter has just been made public:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, March 21, 1871.

To Rear-Admiral S. P. Lee, Commanding North Atlantic Fleet:

ADMIRAL: I herewith inclose a copy of a letter which purports to have been addressed on the 24th day of February last by the officer commanding the Haytian Navy, BENJAMIN F. WADE, Chairman of the Commission sent to San Domingo on that vessel, and which was published in the correspondence of the New-York Tribune on the 17th day of the present month. As the orders to the commander of the Tennessee were simply to carry the Commission on their expedition to such points as they might desire, and contain nothing referring to general instruction or direction, I naturally feel somewhat doubtful of the authenticity of this letter; but, as it has been published as authentic, and contains much which is calculated to mislead the people and authorities of San Domingo as to the true spirit and extent of the orders of the Executive to the naval vessels there, and may perhaps embarrass to some extent the officers in command of those vessels, I have thought it right to correct the unfounded ideas therein contained through you, the commandant of the fleet in those waters.

You will perceive that in this letter the writer assumes in effect that if any person connected with the Commission was taken prisoner by the opponents of the Dominican Republic within their lines, he would be in reality a spy, and might, under the rules of civilized warfare, be treated as such, because the United States has, in the opinion of the writer, through the orders of the Executive to the naval vessels there, chosen to take part in the internal conflicts of the Dominican Republic. This statement is unfounded in fact and inference, and has evidently been made hastily, in ignorance of the real circumstances in the case, or in misapprehension of their legal effect. The United States is dealing with the regularly-constituted Government of the Dominican Republic in a manner and for a purpose not inconsistent with international law; and though the right of revolution against constituted authority for just and adequate cause inheres in every people, yet the constituted Government is, until it is actually overthrown, the legal representative of the nation in all its relations to other peoples, and the right of revolution does not carry with it to the revolutionists, pending the issue of the war, their right to treat the agents of other nations as enemies when not in arms against them, while they are acting, as they have an international right to act, in accordance with the laws of the existing Government. Such treatment, without a formal notice, is contrary to the rules of civilized warfare, and the notice, if given, is at the peril of the insurgents, and is justified only when the disturbance rises to the dignity of a revolution.

But neither the United States nor its Executive has chosen to take part, or has taken part, in the internal conflicts of the Dominican Republic. The attitude of the President of the United States has, by the Constitution, the right to make treaties, subject to the ratification of the Senate. The Congress of the United States, in 1866, appropriated a considerable sum of money for the understood purpose of acquiring by lease or purchase a part of the Island of San Domingo. The Bay and Peninsula of Samana were considered those most appropriate for our purpose as a naval station, and the Republic of San Domingo itself, with its favorable position and natural resources, its friendly Government and people seemed, for the purposes of commerce and civilization, far the most desirable for us of those fragments of our Continent which lie across the gateways of our commerce and which tend to carry our commerce and influence to our great inland sea. To initiate all treaties is the constitutional right of the President, and thus he had the constitutional power to negotiate treaties for the cession of Samana and the annexation of the Dominican Republic. It, upon proper consideration, he thought it right and for the interests of the country whose interests are to this extent intrusted to his judgment, it was his constitutional right. He did negotiate such treaties with the existing Government of the Republic, contemporaneously the Government both de facto and de jure. These treaties were, of course, inchoate and subject to be confirmed or defeated by the action of the Senate of the United States and of the people of the San Dominican Republic, but by such treaties and pending such final action, the United States acquired an interest in the thing negotiated, from which he could not be rightfully disturbed by any other Power, and it was the plain duty of the Executive to protect, if need be, the integrity of this constitutional interest, so that the subject of the negotiation might remain intact until the final action of the ratifying powers could be properly had. This duty is plain and in every case of valuable acquisition, the execution of it will be expected and approved by the people. It was in the discharge of such duty that, in the early part of the present century, President Madison marched the armies of the United States into, and actually took possession of, the territory then known as West Florida, including what is now the State of Alabama, for which territory negotiations were then pending, and afterward concluded and settled with Spain. This action was approved by Congress and the people, not as an exercise of war power, but as the protecting of an interest constitutionally acquired, and in which the Executive was bound to maintain intact while it remained in use. In the present case the President has hitherto only pursued, in relation to the Republic of San Domingo, this same recognized policy of our Government, and in accordance with and by means of an appropriation by Congress for such purpose, we took possession of the Bay and Peninsula of Samana. This possession we still hold, and while our flag flies there we must protect from every interference the interest which it represents.

In carrying out this recognized policy, the Government of the United States has not fired a hostile shot nor a man in hostile attitude on the Island of San Domingo, and has neither interfered in the internal conflicts of the Dominican Republic nor coerced any other Power. It has simply announced to all people generally, and particularly to such as appeared in a threatening attitude, its determination to protect, until finally disposed of, the interest it had acquired in that Republic from all attacks from without its boundaries, and from the interference of any foreign Power, so that, in the event of the treaty being ratified, there would be left the thing contracted for, with no hostile possessions intervening to destroy our right of reemption. To do this is certainly not to make war, or to take part in the conflicts of a country, nor to coerce, nor to attempt to coerce, any Power. It is but the simple performance of a duty to Congress and to the nation in the preservation, in its existing condition, of what we have constitutionally entered into negotiations constitutionally to acquire. Under the orders of the Executive, it is a part of the duty of those ships of your fleet which are at any time cruising in the waters of San Domingo to maintain this status against every Power, and while we would not yield the right to interfere with it to the most powerful Government, we cannot concede that right even to the weakest. Very respectfully,

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

ALBANY.

No Report on Erie Consolidation Yet—The Ring's Massive Railroad Scheme for New-York—Its Advocates Resolved on Pass it Over Every Opposition—Mode of the Frauds that may be Expected in Connection with It.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, March 27.—There was a full attendance in the Assembly for the first time at any Monday evening session this Winter, owing, probably, to the expectation that the Railroad Committee would report on the Erie bill. The Committee did not report, however, but promised to do so to-morrow.

THE NEW-YORK VIADUCT BILL.

The Viaduct Railroad bill was up as the special order in Committee of the Whole, and several amendments were proposed. The first was by Mr. WARD, of Clinton, to the effect that no person should be a director of the road who was not a stockholder, and that at least five millions of dollars should be subscribed, and ten per cent thereof paid in, independent of the City's subscription of five millions, before the Company should be permitted to organize. This was voted down, or, at least, declared to be lost by the Chairman, Mr. MOSELEY, of Kings, who refused to notice Mr. WARD's call for a count, although it was evident to all that the amendment was carried. Mr. ALVORD, of Onondaga, proposed the next amendment, to the effect that the Company should not consolidate with the Hudson River, the Erie, or any other railroad already built or hereafter to be built, and should not lease their road or become the lessee of any other road. This amendment was carried. Mr. WARD then offered an amendment that the plans and specifications for the road should receive the assent of the Governor, instead of permitting the Mayor and Commissioner of Public Works to overrule his objections. This was lost, and other amendments were about being proposed when a motion was made and carried that the Committee rise and report progress on the bill. It was evident from the discussion on these amendments that the Ring have determined to put this bill through at all hazards. The five millions of dollars which the City is authorized to subscribe, and of which they are to have the handling, is too big a stake for them to lose. Speaker HITCHMAN and TOM FIELDS engineered the bill on behalf of the Ring, and opposed every amendment that was offered. They made use of their favorite argument when any Ring job is to be put through, that the bill related exclusively to New-York, and country members had no business to have any opinions about it. When, in answer to this, it was shown that the bill authorized the construction of a railroad in every county of the State, the Ring advocates lost their temper and resorted to threats. HITCHMAN informed the rural members that New-York "intended to have this bill anyhow," and it was useless for them to make any opposition to it, and FIELDS went still further, and said "we are going to pass this bill precisely as it came from the Senate." In opposing WARD's amendments, FIELDS said the "gentleman was only building houses for other people to live in. He might delay the bill, but he couldn't prevent its passage." This was construed to mean that WARD's opposition would result in encouraging the "strikers" to demand a higher price for their votes, but the Ring were bound to pass the bill whatever might be the cost. Mr. SWART called attention to the fact that the bill, as it came down engrossed from the Senate, contained a clause not in the printed bill on file, authorizing the Board of Supervisors of any county to bond the county in aid of the road. Mr. HUSTED, of Westchester, and others protested strongly against this provision, which was declared to be a stretch of authority never before conferred on the Supervisors of any county. FIELDS at first denied that there was any such provision in the bill, but a second reading by the Clerk showed it was there, and how it got there nobody knows, as no such amendment was adopted in the Senate. The public can judge from this what tricks are to be resorted to in order to get the bill tinkered to suit the purposes of the Ring, while the threats of the Speaker and FIELDS show plainly that the measure is to be carried through the Legislature by wholesale bribery.

OUR SAVINGS BANKS.

Synopsis of the Superintendent's Annual Report.

Superintendent HOWELL, of the Banking Department, has submitted to the State Legislature his annual report, in which he says:

Since the last annual report concerning savings banks was submitted to your honorable body, the following institutions have organized and commenced business, and have reported to this department their condition on the 1st of January: Equitable Savings Institution, New-York; Farmers' and Mechanics' Savings Bank, Lockport; Oswego County Savings Bank, Oswego; Pewling Savings Bank, Pewling's Four Jervis; Savings Bank, Port Jervis; Trades' Savings Bank, New-York. All the conditions relating to this interest serve to inspire me with a strong conviction that the indiscriminate multiplying of these institutions, once so has characterized the legislation of the last few years, is most impolitic and hazardous.

The condition and affairs of the savings banks of our State, as compared with the previous year, appear in a general way from the following:

The Mechanics' (formerly Emigrant) Savings Bank, of Buffalo, has become involved in embarrassments resulting from the defalcation of its treasurer, and is winding up its affairs. This unfortunate condition would seem to be the natural result of intrusting the management of the institution almost wholly to a single officer, with little or no oversight on the part of the trustees. Another instance of loss, sustained through the dishonesty of a cashier, has been brought to my notice during the year. I directed an examination to ascertain the extent of the same and learn whether it was so serious as to justify any proceeding on the part of the Attorney-General to close the affairs of the institution. Fortunately the loss did not exceed $2,000, which the trustees have expressed a willingness to make good. The affairs of the institution in question were, from motives of economy, almost wholly intrusted to the officers and clerks of an insurance company, of which some of the trustees were directors. Lack of supervision on the part of the trustees was induced by the conviction that the insurance company, whose premises they occupied and whose subordinates they employed, would exercise the requisite scrutiny. The result failed to justify this confidence on the part of the trustees of the savings bank, and should serve to impress the salutary lesson that there is no safe substitute for a thoroughly careful and intelligent supervision by trustees of the minutest detail of their trust. To insure the vigilant care, the business of a savings bank should be disconnected from all other business. I have more recently had occasion to direct an examination of another institution, where, though the confidence placed in the honesty and fidelity of the officer in charge was justified, yet the control and direction of affairs seemed by common consent to have fallen into the hands of one or two trustees, so that very grave irregularities had occurred, which, if not of themsel

SUMNER AND SAN DOMINGO.

The Long-Threatened Speech of the Senator at Length Delivered.

A Vigorous Attack Upon the President and His Advisers.

Their Course Declared Unlawful and Unconstitutional.

The Use of the Navy an Unauthorized Act of War.

A Brief But Able Reply of Senator Morton.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, D. C., March 27.

Long before the hour of meeting, the gallleries and corridors leading to the Senate were densely thronged by an immense audience eager to hear the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts, who had been announced to address the Senate on San Domingo. The diplomatic and the ladies' galleries were almost entirely monopolized by the fair sex. At 12 o'clock the spectacle was one of the most animating ever witnessed in the Senate Chamber. Mr. SUMNER'S appearance on the floor was welcomed by the galleries with applause.

Upon the conclusion of the reading of the Journal, Mr. SUMNER took the floor, and asked for the reading of the resolution recently submitted by him, and already published, against the use of United States naval forces to uphold HAZE in an attempt to sell his country, in violation of the Constitution, and disregarding the injurious and disapproving remonstrance of the friendly Power of Hayti. He then submitted and had read by the Secretary an additional resolution, declaring that after the failure of the San Domingo Treaty in the Senate, all pretext of title ceased, so that our Government was, in all respects, a stranger to the territory of that island, without any excuse or apology for interference; and, therefore, that any military demonstration or act of war by the United States on the coasts of San Domingo, after the failure of that treaty in the Senate, was unauthorized violence. The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That whatever may be the title to territory under an unratified treaty, it is positive that after the failure of the treaty in the Senate all pretext of title ceased; so that our Government is in all respects a stranger to the territory, without excuse or apology for any interference against its enemies, foreign or domestic; and that any military demonstration or act of war on the coasts of the Island of St. Domingo, after the failure of the Dominican Treaty in the Senate, is unauthorized violence, utterly without support in law or reason, and proceeding directly against the liberties and property which are owned by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. FERRY called attention to the fact that in the pressure to gain admittance to the galleries hundreds of ladies had been excluded. He therefore moved that the cloak-rooms and corridors in the rear of the Senate Chamber be opened for their accommodation. There being no objection, the directors were instructed to carry out the motion as the order of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN hoped that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. SUMNER) would not be interrupted at the expiration of the morning hour, but would be allowed to proceed regularly. It was so ordered.

Mr. SUMNER then rose and addressed the Senate at length, speaking from the seat of his colleague, Mr. WILSON.

SPEECH OF MR. SUMNER.

Mr. SUMNER—Mr. President, entering again upon this discussion, I perform a duty which cannot be avoided. I wish it were otherwise. Not duty is a task-master to be obeyed. Pending before the Senate, it is plain that the navy of the United States, acting under orders from Washington, has been engaged in measures of violence, and of belligerent intervention, being war, without the authority of Congress. An act of war without the authority of Congress is no common event. This is the simplest statement of the case. The whole business is aggravated when it is considered that the declared object of this violence is the acquisition of foreign territory, being half an island in the Caribbean Sea; and still further, that this violence has been employed, first, to prop and maintain a weak ruler, installed as a usurper, unbolding him in power, he might sell his country; and, secondly, it has been employed to menace the black Republic of Hayti. Such a case cannot pass without inquiry. It is too grave for silence. For the sake of the navy, which has been the agent, for the sake of the Administration under which the navy acted, for the sake of our national character, now under the shadow the great republic makes itself a pattern of violence, and for the sake of the Republican Party, which cannot afford to become responsible for such conduct, the case must be examined on the facts and the law, and also in the light of precedent, so far as precedent holds its torch. The question which I present is very simple. It is not whether the acquisition of the Island of San Domingo, in whole or part, with a population foreign in origin, language and institutions, is desirable, but whether we are justified in the means employed to accomplish this acquisition.

REASON FOR INTEREST IN THE QUESTION.

Here, Sir, I venture to relate how and at what time I became specially aroused on this question. The treaty for the annexion of the Dominican people was pending before the Senate, and I was occupied in considering it, asking two questions: first, is it good for us? and, secondly, Is it good for them? The more I meditated these two questions, I found myself forgetting the former and considering the latter, or, rather, the former was absorbed in the latter. This was the question on my mind when I was honored by a call from the Assistant Secretary of State, bringing with him a handful of dispatches from San Domingo. Among these were dispatches from our Consular Agent there, who signed the treaty of annexion, from which it distinctly appeared that BAEZ, while engaged in selling his country, was maintained in power by the navy of the United States. That such was the official report of our Consular Agent, who signed the treaty, there can be no question, and this official report was sustained by at least one other Consular dispatch. I confess now my emotion as I read this painful revelation. Until then I had supposed the proceeding blameless, although precipitate. I had not imagined any such terrible ingredient of irresponsible irregularity. These dispatches became more important as testimony when it appeared that the writers were personally in favor of annexion. Thus, then, it stood that, on the official report of our own agents, we were engaged in forcing upon a weak people the sacrifice of their country. To me it was apparent at once that the acquisition of this foreign territory would not be respectable or even tolerable, unless by the consent of the people there, without force on our part. The treaty was a contract, which, according to our own witnesses, was obtained through a ruler owing power to our war vessels. As such it was beyond all question a contract obtained under duress, and, therefore, void, while the duress was an interference with the internal affairs of a foreign country, and, therefore, contrary to that principle of non-intervention which is now a rule of international law. As this question presented itself, I lost no time in visiting the Navy Department, in order to examine the instructions under which our naval officers were acting, as shown by their reports. Unhappily these instructions and reports were too much in harmony with the other testimony, so that the State Department and Navy Department each contained the record of the deplorable proceedings, and still they pressed the consummation. I could not believe my own eyes, but the evidence was explicit. The story of Naboth's Vineyard was revived. Violence begets violence, and that in San Domingo naturally extended. It is with nations as with individuals—once stepped in, they go forward. The harsh menace by which the independence of the Black Republic of Hayti was rudely assailed came next. It was another stage in belligerent intervention. As these things were unfolded, I felt that I could not hesitate. Here was a shocking wrong. It must be arrested; and to this end I have labored in good faith.

CESSION OF TERRITORY MUST BE A FREE ACT.

I speak only according to unquestionable reason and the instincts of the human heart, when I say that a contract for the cession of territory must be fair and without suspicion of overreaching force. Nobody can doubt this rule, whether for individuals or nations. And where one party is more powerful than another it becomes more imperative. Especially must it be sacred with a republic, for it is nothing but the mandate of justice. It is general in its application; nay, more, it is part of the universal law, constituting as all municipal systems and to international law. Any departure from this requirement makes negotiation for the time impossible. Plainly there can be no cession of territory, and especially no surrender of national independence, except as the result of war, so long as hostile cannon are frowning. The first step in negotiation must be the withdrawal of all force, coercive or military.

EXAMPLE OF SPAIN.

Here the example of Spain furnishes a beacon-light. Yielding to an invitation not unlike that of BAEZ to the United States, this ancient monarchy was induced by SANTANA, President of Dominica, to entertain the proposition of reannexion to the Crown. Here let it be remarked that SANTANA was legitimate President, while BAEZ is a usurping Dictator. And now mark the contrast between the ancient monarchy and our Republic, painful as it is to us. Spain boasted in official papers, that in the act of reannexion the Dominicans were spontaneous, free and unanimous—that no Spanish emissaries were in the territory to influence its people; nor was there a Spanish bottom in its waters or a Spanish soldier on its land. No such boast can be made now. American emissaries are in the territory, with CAZNEAU and FABENS as leaders, while American war-vessels, including the Dictator, our most powerful monitor, properly named for the service, were in the waters with guns pointed as the people to be conquered, and American soldiers, with bayonets glancing in the sun, were on the decks of these war-vessels, if not on the land. The contrast is complete. In the case of Spain the proceeding was an act of peace; in our case it is an act of war. The two cases are as wide asunder as peace and war. All must feel the importance of this statement, which I have to say is not without official authority. I hold in my hand the Spanish documents relating to the reannexion of Dominica, as published by the Cortes.

CONTRAST BETWEEN SPAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

And now mark the contrast between the old Monarchy and the great Republic. The recent return of the Navy Department to the Senate, in reply to a resolution introduced by me, shows how the whole island has been buccaneered by our navy, sailing from port to port, and hurling the land with its guns. Here is the return:

"The following are the names of the vessels which have been in the waters of the Island of San Domingo since the commencement of the negotiations with Dominica, with their armaments:

Severn—Fourteen nine-inch and one sixty-pounder rifle.

Guerriere—Six thirty-two-pounders, 4,500 pounds; one sixty-pounder rifle.

Severn—Six thirty-two-pounders, 4,500 pounds; one eleven-inch.

Yantic—One eleven-inch and two nine-inch.

Dictator—Two fifteen-inch.

Swatara—Four nine-inch.

Tacony—Four fifteen-inch.

Albany—Fourteen nine-inch and one sixty-pounder rifle.

Nipsic—One eleven-inch and two nine-inch.

Seminole—One eleven-inch and four thirty-two pounders of 4,500 pounds.

Tennessee—On spar-deck, two eleven-inch, two nine-inch, two one hundred-pounders and one sixty-pounder; on gun-deck, twenty-nine-inch.

"The ships now in those waters are, as far as is known to the Department, the Congress, the Wampanoag, the Plunkett and the Tennessee." (Senate Ex. Doc., No. 46, page 4, Forty-first Cong., Third Session.)

Twelve mighty war-ships, including two, if not three, powerful monitors, maintained at the cost of millions of dollars, being the pride of the people of the pending negotiation. Besides what we pay to BAEZ there are millions down. Rarely have we had such a fleet in any waters—not in the Mediterranean, not in the Pacific, not in the East Indies. It is in the waters of San Domingo that our navy finds its chosen field. Here is its flag, and here also is its frown. And why this array? If our purpose is peaceful, why these engines of war? If we seek annexion by the declared will of the people, spontaneous, free, and unanimous, as was the boast of Spain, why these floating batteries to overawe them? If we would do good to the African race, why begin with violence to the Black Republic? Before the Commissioners to Dominica, the monitors were already three war-ships with powerful armaments in these waters—the Congress, with fourteen nine-inch guns and two sixty-pounder rifles; the Wampanoag, with six thirty-two-pounders, 4,500 pounds, and one sixty-pounder rifle; and the Plunkett, with one eleven-inch gun and fourteen nine-inch guns, and the same the Tennessee, with two eleven-inch and two nine-inch guns, two one hundred-pounders and one sixty-pounder on its spar-deck, and sixteen nine-inch guns on its gun deck, to augment these forces already disproportioned to any proper object. The Commissioners are announced as ministers of peace; at all events their declared duty is to ascertain the will of the people. But why attempt to sway them in a war-ship? Why cram the dove in a cannon's mouth? There are good steamers at New-York, safe and sea-worthy, whose presence would not swell the array of war, nor subject the great Republic to the grave imputation of seeking to accomplish its purpose by violence.

TRAGICAL END OF SPANISH OCCUPATION.

If, while negotiating with the Dominicans for their territory, and what is more than territory, their national life, you will not follow Spanish example and withdraw your war-ships with their flashing arms and threatening thunder, at least be taught by the tragedy which attended even this most propitious attempt. These same volumes of authentic evidence show, notwithstanding the apparent spontaneousness, freedom and unanimity of the invitation, the forbearance of Spain was followed by resistance where sun and climate united with the people. An official report laid before the Cortes describes nine thousand Spanish soldiers dead with disease, while the Spanish population was reduced to three towns on the sea-board, and it was perilous for small parties to go any distance outside the walls of the City of San Domingo. The same report declares that twenty thousand troops, provided for a campaign of six months, would be required to penetrate "the heart of Cibao," where the black race now occupied by Gen. CABRAL, who disputes the power of BAEZ. At last Spain submitted. The spirit of independence prevailed once more on the island, and the proud banner of Castile, when had come in peace, amid general congratulations, and with the boast of not a Spanish bottom or Spanish soldier near, was withdrawn.

SEIZURE OF WAR POWERS BY OUR GOVERNMENT.

All this is preliminary, although pointing the way to a just conclusion. It is only when we enter into details and consider what has been done by our Government, that we recognize the magnitude of the violence. Unless the evidence supplied by the agents of our Government is at fault—unless the reports of the State Department and Navy Department are discredited, it is obvious beyond doubt, most painfully plain and indisputable, that our Government has seized the war powers carefully guarded by the Constitution, and that the authority of Congress has employed them to trample on the independence and equal rights of two nations, coequal with ours, unless to carry out this project of territorial acquisition you begin by setting at defiance a first principle of international law. This is no hasty or idle allegation, nor is it made without unmeasurable regret. And the regret is increased by the very severity of the evidence, which is strictly official and beyond all question.

BAEZ, "THE USURPER."

In this melancholy business the central figure is BUENAVENTURA BAEZ, unless we except President GRANT, to whom some would accord the place of honor. The two have acted together as co-partners. To appreciate the case, and especially to comprehend the breach of public law, you must know something of the former and how he has been enabled to play his part. Dominican by birth, with much of Spanish blood, and with a French education, he is a cross where these different elements are somewhat rudely intertwined. All his life he has been adventurer, conspirator and trickster, uncertain in opinions, without character, without patriotism, without truth, looking out supremely for himself, and on any side according to immediate personal interest, being once violent against the United States as he now professes to be for them. By the influence of Gen. SANTANA, BAEZ obtained his first election as President in 1856, when, contrary to a positive provision of the Constitution against a second term except after the intervention of an entire term, he managed by fraud and intrigue to obtain another lease of power. Beginning thus early his violations of the Constitution he became an expert. But the people rose against him and he was driven to find shelter within the walls of the city. He had never been friendly to the United States, and at this time was especially abusive. His capitulation soon followed, and after eleven months of usurped power he left for France. SANTANA succeeded to the Presidency, and under him, in 1861, the country was reincorporated with Spain, amid the prevailing enthusiasm of the people. Anxious to propitiate the different political chiefs, the Spanish Government offered BAEZ a Field-Marshal's commission on condition that he should remain in Europe, which, I understand, he accepted. For some years there was peace in Dominica, when the people, under the lead of the patriot CABRAL, rose against the Spanish power. During this protracted period of revolution, while the patriotism of the country was stirred to its inmost depths, the Dominican adventurer clung to his Spanish commission with its honors and emoluments, not parting with them until six weeks after the Cortes in Madrid had renounced the country and ordered its evacuation; and then, in his letter of resignation addressed to the Queen, under date of June 15, 1865, he again outraged the feelings of his countrymen by declaring his regret at the failure of annexation to Spain and his "regard for her august person and the noble Spanish nation" against whose arms they had been fighting for independence. Losing his Spanish honors and emoluments, the adventurer was at once changed into a conspirator, being always a trickster, and from his European retreat began his machinations for power. Are we not told by the proverb that the devil has a long arm? On the disappearance of the Spanish flag CABRAL became Protector, and a National Convention was summoned to frame a Constitution and to organize a new Government. The people were largely in favor of CABRAL, when armed men, in the name of BAEZ, and stimulated by his emissaries, overwhelmed the assembly with violence, forcing the conspirators into power. CABRAL, who seems to have been a very prudent and humane, anxious to avoid bloodshed, and thinking that his considerable European residence might have improved the usurper, consented to accept a place in the Cabinet which was inaugurated Dec. 8, 1865. Forgotten power is short-lived, revolution soon began, and in the month of May, BAEZ, after first finding asylum in the French Consulate, fled to foreign parts. The official journal of San Domingo, El Monitor, (June 1, 1866,) now before me, shows how the fugitive tyrant was regarded at this time. In the leading article it is said:

"The administration of Gen. BAEZ has fallen under the weight of a great revolution, in which figured the principal notabilities of the country. A spontaneous cry, which may be called national, because it rose from the depths of the majority, revealed the proportions of the movement, its character and its legitimacy."

Then follows in the same journal a manifesto signed by the principal inhabitants of San Domingo, in which is set forth with much particularity the grounds of his overthrow, alleging that he became President, not by the free and spontaneous choice of the people, but that he was imposed by an armed movement; that he treated the chief magistracy as if it were his own patrimony, and monopolized among all his kindred the lucrative posts without regard to the public service; that, instead of recognizing the merit of those who had by their sacrifices served their country, he degraded, imprisoned and banished them; that, in violation of the immunity belonging to members of the Constituent Assembly, he sent them to a most horrid prison, and here numerous persons are named; that without any judicial proceedings, contrary to the Constitution, and in the spirit of vengeance, he shut up many deserving men in obscure dungeons, and here also are many names; that, since his occupation of the Presidency, he has held the capital in constant alarm, and has established a system of terrorism in the bosom of the national representation. All this and much more will be found in this manifesto. There is also a manifesto of CABRAL, assigning at still greater length reasons for his overthrow of BAEZ, and holding himself as the chief of peace and union; also a manifesto by the Triumvirate, constituting the Provisional Government, declaring his infractions of the Constitution; also a manifesto from the General in command at the City of San Domingo, where, after denouncing the misdeeds of one man, it says, "this man, this monster, this speculator, this tyrant is Buenaventura BAEZ."

Soon after the disappearance of BAEZ, his rival became lawful President by the direct vote of the people, according to the requirement of the Constitution. Different numbers of the official journal now before me contain the election returns in September, 1866, where the name of Gen. JOSE MARIA CABRAL appears at the head of the poll. This is memorable as the first time in the history of Dominica when a question was submitted to the direct vote of the people. By that direct vote CABRAL became President, and peace ensued. Since then there has been no election, so that this was last as well as first. During his enforced exile, BAEZ found his way to Washington. Mr. SEWARD declined to see him, but referred him to me. I had several interviews with the exile, and he stated his case. His avowed object was to obtain assistance of money and arms to aid him in the overthrow of the existing Government. Be assured, Mr. President, he obtained no encouragement from me, although I did not hesitate to say, as I always have said, that I hoped my country would never fail to do all possible good to Dominica, whenever it is to be begun. I was not at a later day that our belligerent intervention began. Meanwhile CABRAL, embarrassed by financial difficulties and a dead weight of paper money, the legacy of the fugitive conspirator, turned to the United States for assistance, offering a lease of the Bay of Samana. Then spoke BAEZ from his retreat in Europe. "Now, I recognize that he called "the sale of his country to the United States," adopting the most inflammatory language. By his far-reaching and unscrupulous activity a hostile force was organized, which, with the help of SALNAVE, the late ruler of Hayti, compelled the capitulation of CABRAL, Feb. 4, 1868. A Convention was appointed, not elected, which proceeded to nominate BAEZ President, not by a vote, but one-President, but as Dictator. Declaring the latter title the triumphant conspirator accepted that of Gran Ciudadano or Grand Citizen, with unlimited powers. At the same time his enemies were driven into exile or executed. The prisons were gorged, and the most respectable citizens were his victims. Naturally such a man, without the means of bribery, Wanting money, he cared little how it was got. Anything for money, even his country.

ORIGIN OF THE SCHEME.

CABRAL withdrew to the interior, keeping up a menacing of war, while the contest continued with the unscrupulous usurper, who for the second time had obtained power by violence. Power thus obtained was naturally uncertain, and BAEZ soon found himself obliged to invoke foreign assistance. "He, or me, Cassius, or I sink!" cried the Grand Citizen. European Powers would not listen. None of them wanted his help. Spain was in no mood to help anybody. England. None would take it. But still the Grand Citizen cried, when at last he was relieved by an answering voice from our Republic. A young officer, inexperienced in life, ignorant of the world, untaught in the Spanish language, unversed in international law, knowing absolutely nothing of the intercourse between nations, ignorant of the conditions of the institution of this country, was selected by the President to answer the cry of the Grand Citizen. I wish that I could say something better of Gen. BABCOCK; but if I spoke according to the evidence, much from his own lips, the portraiture would be more painful and his unfitness more manifest. In closest association with BAEZ, and wish profitable concessions, not easy to measure, was the American CABNEAU, known as delegate to our country, and also as agent, suspected there, of another plenipotentiary, before leaving Washington, was expressly warned against him; but like seeks like, and he at once rushed into the embrace of the selfish speculator, who boasted his intimacy beyond all Americans "with the Samana and annexation negotiations to their close," and who did not hesitate to instruct BAEZ that it was not only his right but duty to keep an American citizen in prison "to serve and protect negotiations in which our President was interested," which he denominates "the great business in hand." (Hatch-San Domingo Report, p. 138, Forty-first Congress, second session, No. 234.) By the side of CAZNEAU was FABENS, also a speculator and kite-flying intriguer, after an Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of BAEZ in "the great business." Sparing details, which would make the picture more sombre, I come at once to the conclusion. A treaty was signed by which the usurper pretended to sell his country to the United States in consideration of $1,500,000; also another treaty, not ratified, for the Bay of Samana for an annuity of $150,000. The latter sum was paid down by the young plenipotentiary, or $100,000 in cash and $50,000 in muskets and in a battery. No longer able to pocket the doubloons of Spain, the usurper sought to pocket our eagles, and not content with muskets and a battery to be used against his fellow-countrymen, he obtained the Navy of the United States to maintain him in his treason. It was a plot worthy of the hardened conspirator and his well-tried confederates.

OPEN INFRACTION OF DOMINICAN CONSTITUTION.

The case was aggravated by the open infraction of the Constitution of Dominica with which it proceeded. By that Constitution, adopted 27th September, 1866, a copy of which is now before me, it is solemnly declared that "neither the whole nor any part of the territory of the Republic can be alienated," while the President takes the following oath of office: "I swear by God and the Holy Evangelists to keep, and cause to be kept, the Constitution and the law of the Dominican people, to respect their rights and to maintain the national independence." Previous constitutions had said simply, "no part of the territory of the Republic shall be alienated;" but in view of anticipating recent events, it was declared "neither the whole nor any part," thus explicitly excluding the power exercised. All this was set aside while the plot went on. Even if BAEZ defined the constitution of his country, our Government, in dealing with him, could not do so. It became partner with another power, the Great Republic, which is an example to nations, and not be insensible to the restrictions imposed by the Constitution of the contracting party, and this duty becomes stronger from the very weakness of the other side. Defied by the Dominican usurper, all these restrictions must be sacredly regarded by us.

WAR.

War, Sir, is the saddest chapter of history. It is known as the last resource of kings. Alas! that it should ever be the reason of a republic. "There can be no such thing, my Lords, as a little war," was the exclamation of the Duke of WELLINGTON, which I heard from his own lips, as he protested against what to some seemed petty. Gathering all the vigor of his venerable form, the warrior, seasoned in a hundred fights, cried out, and all within the sound of his voice felt the testimony. The reason is obvious. War, whether great or little, whether on the fields of France or the island of San Domingo, is war, over which hovers not only death, but every demon of wrath. Nor is war merely conflict on a chosen field; it is force employed by one nation against another, or in the affairs of another, as in the direct menace to Hayti and the intermeddling between BAEZ and CABRAL. There may be war without battle. HERCULES conquered by manifest strength the moment he appeared on the ground, so that his club rested unused. And so our navy, has thus far conquered without a shot; but its presence in the waters of Hayti and Dominica was war.

TWO SOURCES OF TESTIMONY.

All this will be found under two different heads, or in two different sources; first, what is furnished by the State Department, and secondly, what is furnished by the Navy Department. These two Departments are witnesses, with their agents, confessing and acting. From the former we have confession; from the latter we have acts; confessions and acts all in harmony and supporting each other. I begin with the confession.

CONFESSION OF STATE DEPARTMENT.

In the strange report of the Secretary of State responsive to a resolution moved by me in the Senate, the dependence of BAEZ upon our navy is confessed in various forms. Nobody can read this document without noting the confession—first from the reluctant Secretary, and then from his agent. Referring to the correspondence of RAYMOND H. FERRY, our consular agent at San Domingo, who assumed the treaties, the Secretary presents a summary, which, though objectionable to just criticism, is a confession. According to him, the correspondence "tends to show that the presence of a United States man-of-war in the port was supposed to have a peaceful influence." (Senate Ex. Doc. No. 11, Forty-First Congress, third session, page 12.) The term "peaceful influence" is the pleonasm of the Secretary confessing the maintenance of BAEZ in his usurpation. There is no such thing as stealing; "convey the wise it call;" and so with the Secretary, the maintenance of a usurper by our war-ships is only exerting "a peaceful influence." A discovery of the Secretary. But in the levity of his statement, the Secretary forgets that a United States man-of-war has nothing to do within a foreign jurisdiction, and cannot exert influence there without unlawful intervention. The Secretary slinks also to the possibility of "another revolution," of course, against BAEZ in the event of the failure of the annexation plot, and here is another confession of the dependence of the usurper upon our navy. But the correspondence of Mr. FERRY, as communicated to the Senate, shows more plainly than the confession of the Secretary how completely the usurper was maintained in power by the strong arm of the United States. The anxiety of the usurper was betrayed at an early day, even while vaunting the popular enthusiasm for annexion. In a dispatch dated at San Domingo, Jan. 20, 1870, Mr. FERRY thus reports: "The Wampanoag left this port Jan. 1, 1870, and we have not heard from her since. She was to go to Puerto Plata (a port of Dominica) and return via Samana Bay. (also in Dominica.) We need the protection of a man-of-war very much, but anticipate her return very soon."

Why the man-of-war was needed is easily inferred from what is said in the same dispatch:

"The President tells me that it is almost impossible to prevent the people pronouncing for annexion before the proper time. He prefers to await the arrival of a United States man-of-war before their opinion is publicly expressed." (Ibid., p. 104.)

If the truth were told, the usurper felt that it was almost impossible to prevent the people from pronouncing for his overthrow, and therefore he wanted war-ships. Then under date of Feb. 8, 1870, Mr. FERRY reports again:

"President BAEZ daily remarks that the United States Government has kept its promises to send men-of-war to the coast. He seems very timid, and lacks energy." (Hatch-San Domingo Rep., p. 62; Senate No. 234, Forty-first Congress, second session.)

The fetch business is still more apparent in the dispatch of Feb. 20, 1870, nearly three months after the signature of the treaties, and while they were still pending before the Senate, where it is openly reported:

"If the United States ships were withdrawn, he (BAEZ) could not hold the reins of the Government. I have told him this." (Senate Ex. Doc., p. 105, No. 17, Forty-first Congress, third session.)

Nothing can be plainer. In other words, the usurper was maintained in power by our guns. Such was the official communication of the very agent who had signed the treaties, and who was himself an ardent annexationist. Desiring annexion, he confesses the means employed to accomplish it. How the President did not at once abandon unfinished treaties maintained by violence, how the Secretary of State did not at once resign rather than be a party to this transaction, is beyond comprehension. Nor was the Secretary left uninformed with regard to the distribution of the naval force. Here is the report, under date of San Domingo, March 13, 1870, while the votings was proceeding:

"The Severn lies at this port; the Dictator left for Samana the 9th; the Nantasket goes to Puerto Plata to-morrow, the 14th; the Tenedos left the 4th instant for the city. Admiral POOR, on board the Severn, is expected to remain at this port for some time. Everything is very quiet at present throughout the country." (Ibid., page 107.)

Thus under the guns of our navy was quiet maintained, while BAEZ, like another usurper, declared that "Now, encouraged, he would proceed bravely on." What follows in official report to the State Department is afterward reaffirmed under oath, in his testimony before the Committee of the Senate on the case of Mr. HATCH. The words were few, but decisive, touching the acts of our navy—

"Committed since we left, from there protecting BAEZ from the citizens of San Domingo." (Hatch-San Domingo Report, p. 62, Forty-first Congress, second session.)

Then, again, in a private letter to myself, under date of Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 10, 1871, after stating that he had reported what the record shows to be true, that BAEZ was sustained and held in power by the United States Navy," he adds:

"This fact BAEZ acknowledged to me."

So that we have the confession of the Secretary of State, also the confession of his agent at San Domingo, and the confession of BAEZ himself, that the usurper appealed for support on our navy.

HAYTI.

But intervention in Dominica is only one part of the story, even according to the confession of the State Department. Hayti side with Dominica on the same island, the black Republic of Hayti, with a population, which more than two generations ago achieved national independence, and at a later day, by the recognition of our Government, took its place under the law of nations as equal and peer of the great Powers, to all its paramount titles of independence and equality, secured and unimpaired, it would be added its special character as an example of self-government, being the first in the history of the African race, and a promise of the future. Who can doubt that as such this black Republic has a value beyond all the products of its teeming tropical soil? Like other Governments, not excepting our own, it has complications, domestic and foreign. Among the latter is chronic hostility with Dominica, arising from claims of territory and pecuniary. To these claims I refer without undertaking to convince their justice. It is enough that they exist. And here comes the wrong perpetrated by the Great Republic. In the effort to secure the much-coveted territory, our Government, not content with maintaining the usurper BAEZ in power, occupying the harbor of Dominica with the war-ships of the United States, with other war-ships, being none other than our most powerful monitor, the Dictator, with the frigate Severn as consort, and with yet other monitors in their train, to menace the black Republic by an act of war. An American Admiral was found to do this thing, and an American Minister, himself of African blood, was found to sit the Admiral.

RECORD OF THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

If the report of the State Department is a confession, that of the Navy Department is an authentic record of acts flagrant and indefensible, unless we are ready to set aside the law of nations and the Constitution of the United States, two great safeguards. Both of these are degraded in order to advance the scheme. If I called it plot I should not err, for this term is suggested by the record. Unless the record is complete, the scheme first appears in the form of a letter from the Secretary of State to the Secretary of the Navy, under date of May 11, 1869, informing the latter that the President deems it "desirable that a man-of-war, commanded by a discreet and intelligent officer, should be ordered to visit the several ports of the Dominican Republic, and to report upon the condition of affairs in that quarter." The Secretary adds: "It is also important that we should have full and accurate information in regard to the views of the Dominicans of all parties in regard to annexation to the United States, or the sale or lease of the Bay of Samana, or of territory adjacent thereto." (Senate Ex. Doc., No. 9, p. 1, Forty-first Congress, third session.) Notwithstanding this island appears; not a word even from any of its people. The beginning is with the letter of the Secretary, and here we see how a "man-of-war" formed part of the first stage. A mere inquiry is inaugurated by a "man-of-war." Nor was it the step at a single place; it was to "the several ports" of the Dominican Republic. The Secretary of the Navy obeyed. Orders were given, and under date of June 20, 1869, Rear-Admiral HORN reports that the Nipsic, with an armament of one eleven-inch and two nine-inch guns, "is to visit all the ports of the Dominican Republic." Here again is a revelation. Secretaries bowing the future visits of the ports are to be visited by this powerful war-ship. Why? To what just end? If for negotiation, then was force—FORCE—FORCE our earnest, as it has been since, our constant plenipotentiary. Already we discern the contrast with Old Spain. The loss of a screw occurred to prevent. But war-breathing perambulation. The Nipsic did not go beyond Port-au-Prince; but Lieut. Commander SELFRIDGE, in his report, under date of July 14, 1869, lets drop an honest judgment, which causes regret that he did not visit the whole island. Thus he wrote:

"While my short stay in the island will not permit me to speak with authority, it is my individual opinion, that if the United States Government expects the representation of a party, it would be found an elephant both costly in money and lives."—(Ibid p. 6.)

The whole case is opened when we are warned against annexion "on the representation of a party. Still the scheme proceeded. On the 17th July, 1869, Gen. BABCOCK sailed from New-York for San Domingo, as special agent of the State Department. The records of the Department, so far as communicated to the Senate, show no authority to open negotiations of any kind, much less to treat for the acquisition of this half island. His instructions, which are dated July 15, 1869, are simply to make certain inquiries; but, under the same date, the Secretary of the Navy addresses a letter to Commander OWEN, of the Seminole, with an armament of one eleven-inch gun, and four thirty-two-pounders, of 4,500 pounds, in which he says:

"You will remain at Samana or on the coast of San Domingo while Gen. BABCOCK is there, and give him the moral support of your guns." (Ibid. p. 6.)

The phrase of the Secretary was least curious. And who is Gen. BABCOCK, that on his visit the navy is to be at his back? Nothing on this head is said. All that we know from the record is that he was to make certain inquiries, and in this business "guns" play a part. To be sure, it was their "moral support" he was to have; but they were nevertheless "guns." Thus in all times has lawless force sought to shield itself. Before any negotiation was begun, while only a few interrogatories were ordered by the State Department, under which he acted, "the moral support of guns" was ordered by the Navy Department. Here, Sir, permit me to say, is the first sign of war, being an unauthorized usurpation, whether by President or Secretary. War is hostile force, and here it is exerted. But this is only a squint compared with the open declaration which ensued. Once again we witness the contrast with Old Spain. But the "guns" of the Seminole were not enough to support the plenipotentiary in his inquiries. The Navy Department, under date of Aug. 29, 1869, telegraphed to the commander at Key West:

"Direct a vessel to proceed without a moment's delay to San Domingo City, to be placed at the disposal of Gen. BABCOCK, while on that island. If not at San Domingo City, to find him." (Ibid. p. 8.)

Here is nothing less than the terrible earnestness of war itself. Accordingly, the Tuscarora was dispatched, and the plenipotentiary finds himself changed to a Commissioner. Again the contrast with old Spain! How many days the Tuscarora took to reach the coast does not appear; but on the 4th September the famous protocol was executed, by GEORGE B. BABCOCK, signating himself "Aide-de-Camp of his Excellency Gen. ULYSSES S. GRANT, President of the United States of America," where, besides stipulating the annexion of Dominica to the United States in consideration of $1,500,000, it is further provided that "his Excellency Gen. GRANT, President of the United States, promises privately to use all his influence in order that the idea for annexing the Dominican Republic to the United States may acquire such a degree of popularity among members of Congress as will be necessary for its accomplishment." (Hatch-San Domingo Report, Senate, No. 234, p. 138, Forty-first Congress, second session.) Such was the work, which needed so suddenly—" without a moment's delay"—a second war-ship, besides the Nipsic, which was already ordered "to lend the moral support of its guns." How unlike the condition of old Spain, besides! That there was not a Spanish bottom in the waters! Returning to Washington with his protocol, the plenipotentiary was now sent back with instructions to negotiate two treaties, one for the cession of the half island and the other for the lease of the Bay of Samana. How this business appears from the State Department. The report of the Navy Department shows how it was sustained by force. By a letter under date of Dec. 3, 1869, on board the ship Alaska, addressed to Commander BUNCH on board the Nantasket, the plenipotentiary, after announcing the conclusion of a treaty for the lease of Samana and other purposes, imparts this important information:

"In this negotiation the President has guaranteed to the Dominican Republic protection against foreign interposition during the time specified in the treaties for submitting the same to the people of the Dominican Republic."

Of the absolute futility and nullity of this guarantee until after the ratification of the treaties, I shall speak hereafter. Meanwhile we behold the plenipotentiary:

"For this purpose the honorable Secretary of the Navy was directed to place three armed vessels in this harbor, subject to my instruction."

Why three armed vessels? For what purpose? How unlike Old Spain! What follows reveals the menace of war:

"I shall raise the United States flag on shore, and shall leave a small guard with it."

Here is nothing less than military occupation. Besides war-ships in the waters, the flag is to be raised on shore, and soldiers of the United States are to be left with it. Again, the contrast with old Spain, who boasted not only that there was not a single Spanish bottom on the coast, but not a single Spanish soldier on the land. Then follows an order to make war:

"Should you find any foreign intervention intended, you will use all your force to carry out to the letter the guarantees given in the treaties."

Nothing could be stronger. Here is war. Then comes a direct menace by the young plenipotentiary, launched at the neighboring Black Republic:

"The Dominican Republic fearing trouble from the Haytian border, also has armed and drilled men. I inform the people, in case you are satisfied there is an intended intervention, that such intervention, directly or indirectly, will be regarded as an unfriendly act towards the United States, and I trust that I may count on your assistance." (Senate Ex. Doc. No. 34, p. 9, Forty-first Congress, third session.)

The Dominican Republic fears trouble, or, in other words, the usurper BAEZ trembles for his power, and therefore the guns of our navy are to be pointed at Hayti. Again, how little like old Spain! And thus was the way in which our negotiation began. We hear no more of an "armed neutrality," and of not an armed peace; but here is an armed negotiation. The force employed in the negotiation naturally functioned in other force. Violence follows violence in new forms. Armed negotiation was changed to armed intervention, being an act of war, all of which is plainly and unquestionably. There is repetition and reduplication of testimony. The swiftness of war appears in the telegram dated at the Navy Department Jan. 20, 1870, addressed to Rear-Admiral POOR, at Key West. Here is this painful dispatch:

"Proceed at once with the Severn and Dictator to Puerto Plata; communicate with our Consul there, and inform the President of Dominica emphatically that this Government is determined to protect the present Dominican Government with all its power. You will then proceed to Dominica, and use your force to give the most ample protection to the Dominican Government against the Haytian Republic. Your force will then proceed to San Domingo City, and use your force to give the most ample protection to the Dominican Government against any Haytian force that may be found with it. Visit Samana Bay and the adjacent islands, and see the United States power and authority secure there. There must be no failure in this matter. If the Haytian Republic attempts to carry out its threats, capture or capture them. See that there is a proper force at both San Domingo City and Samana. If Admiral POOR is not at Key West, this dispatch must be forwarded to him without delay." (Ibid., p. 11.)

"Proceed at once!" Mark the warlike energy. What then? "Inform the Haytian Government that this Government is determined to protect the present Dominican Government [the usurper BAEZ] with all its power." Strong words, and vast in scope. Not only the whole navy of the United States, but all the power of our country is promised to the usurper. At Dominica, where the Admiral is to go next, he is directed to use his force "to give the most ample protection to the Dominican Government [the usurper BAEZ] against any Power attempting to interfere with it." Then follows the direction to "visit Samana and the City of San Domingo" "see the United States power and authority secure there." Here is nothing less than military occupation. Pray, by what title? Mark again the warlike energy. And, then giving to the war a new character, the Admiral is told: "If the Haytians attack the Dominicans with their ships, destroy or capture them." Such is the language of discretion, of war, which is like a mitrailleuse in death-dealing missives. This belligerent intervention in the affairs of another country, with a declaration of war against the Black Republic, all without any authority from Congress or any sanction under the Constitution, was followed by a dispatch, dated Jan. 31,

METHODIST DISCIPLINE.

Condemnation of Fashionable Pleasures and Amusements—Further Discussion at the Meeting at the Preachers' Association.

The Methodist Preachers' Association met yesterday, Rev. Dr. CRAWFORD presiding. The discussion on fashionable pleasures and amusements was resumed by Rev. Mr. BOTTOME. He said the question touched a plague-spot in America's society; that we are an intense people who do nothing by halves, and that the human system cannot endure the constant exhaustion of its powers without giving way sooner or later. The human energies must be recuperated; and rest and recreation are essential elements of moral existence. The sad and jaded form of a man at the age of forty-five was a terrible caricature of human life. They had no general holidays for the people to go into the country to meet the much-needed change and temporary freedom from the cares of the world, but they go on ever droning over the Song of the Shirt:

"Work, work, work,
From weary chime to chime;
Work, work, work,
As prisoners work for crime."

Yet they must have amusements, but they had them in excess, and never stopped to inquire their character. What, he asked, was the duty of the pulpit? Was it to denounce and drawing away the people from the amusements while they are are making impossible the salvation of thousands. The power of the pulpit is limited to the force of moral sentiment. The pulpit cannot stop dancing or shut up theatres, but it may wake up public morals. Excess is the national vice, which should be attacked. In his opinion, the direction to be taken in this matter was the Lord. The general rule only applied in amusements which were not for the glory of God. As to laying up treasures and wearing of gold, what Methodist minister of today would feel himself compromised in putting on an old coat to work in and call it? He admitted that the general character of dancing was bad; but a member dancing with his own family, and, as he believed to the glory of God, was quite a different thing, and did not come within the prohibitory rule. Certain amusements were dangerous alike to the State and morality, and every Christian man should avoid them. The Mormons had tried polygamy, but had, he said, largely withdrawn the cultivated and refined from the circles of the Government, and left its reins in the hands of the worst men among them. The house of the ball-room was the pigeon for Christian men and no well-instructed Christian could participate in such amusements without loss of faith. As to preaching against those excesses, it should be done calmly and explicitly, and not in a spirit of invective, which did more harm than good. They were, he thought, too technical, and insisted too much on the letter of the law. Let the minds of the people be educated after the purity of God, and the warning and admonition would not be needed. Rev. Dr. FERRIS regretted that there should have been any occasion for the remarks which he made at their last meeting in reference to Mr. SHAFFER, and yet he would, under similar circumstances, make them over again. There must, he said, be a line of distinction between the world and the Church. The world was no longer going to judge them by creeds or ceremonies, but by what they practiced. The Bible recognized a marked distinction. It called upon them to be separate from the world and avoid its foolish practices. He deprecated any tendency toward breaking down that line of distinction. He did not believe in the doctrine, that every man believed to himself. Let every man make his own standard and how many standards would there be? He knew it was difficult to draw the line, still there was a line beyond which it is not safe for a Christian man to travel. There were four different classes of worldly amusements, some of which were no doubt admissible, and others decidedly so. He considered it not a very reasonable pastime. He condemned dancing, theatre-going and card-playing, and he did not know whether novel-reading was a fashionable amusement or not. He knew a case where a Methodist minister went in disguise to a theatre. That clergyman needed discipline. There were other amusements of a doubtful character, among which he would class church fairs, which he hoped would be blotted out from the Church. Again alluding to dancing, he asked, if dancing is practiced for exercise, why not use some other form of exercise; if practiced for amusement, why do not gentlemen dance by themselves? That, he said, the whole thing is spoiled unless there be a lady there. He urged the ministers to preach against those amusements, plainly and earnestly, and to have their practice agree with their theory. When the spirit was the same out of the pulpit as it is in it, half the work would be accomplished. There was a great deal of dancing carried on in Mr. SHAFFER's district, and he asks, can Brother SHAFFER rebuke those who resort to those dancing-houses when he practices dancing in his own house? There must be discipline, and he would begin with a few of the wealthy classes. A few examples would do more good than all the revivals which they had had for the past ten years.

Rev. Mr. CARTER spoke against dancing.

Rev. Mr. SHAFFER had no difficulty in agreeing with most of Dr. FERRIS' remarks, and he was glad to see an amicable spirit pervading the meeting.

Rev. Dr. HARRIS asked Dr. FERRIS to point out the rule against dancing.

Dr. FERRIS referred him to the General Rules, page 31, where he would find the words "Taking such diversion as cannot be used in the name of the Lord."

Dr. CURRY did not consider novel-reading as coming within the rule. He held that ministers were bound to be acquainted with the current literature of the day.

An old circular letter from the Bishops condemning dancing having been read, the meeting adjourned.

THE JUMEL ESTATE.

The Suit of Geo. Washington Bowne—Further Testimony in his Behalf.

The testimony in the suit of GEORGE WASHINGTON BOWNE against NELSON CHASE, which has been reported in the TIMES for several days, was continued in Mr. GIDEON J. TUCKER's office yesterday. Mr. TUCKER himself being sick, Gen. CHATFIELD took his place on behalf of the plaintiff, Mrs. A. M. VANDERVOORT, whose examinations occupied the last three sessions, was further cross-examined by CHAS. O'CONOR. She decided to the appearance of Mme. JUMEL and of MARY BOWNE, who was afterward Mrs. CHASE, whom she first saw at Stephen's; her remembrance of her own birth, and of her mother, who saw her when she was born, was, of course, merely hearsay, as died of the adoption of her mother by FREELOVE BALLOU; she had never heard that her own mother was a sister of Mme. JUMEL except to her husband and her "aunt and daughters;" she had never heard anybody except her mother, FREELOVE BALLOU, and Mme. JUMEL says that her mother and Mme. JUMEL were sisters. The witness then gave considerable testimony as to her own education and her family, and about the old year of 1812. While I was living in Fifty-third street, she said, a man called and said he wanted to find the girl Mrs. BALLOU brought up; I asked him if he expected to find a girl, he said "No, an old lady;" I told him "that was my mother; he asked me if GEO. W. BOWNE was living; I told him he was, living in Providence; he said he was looking up Mme. JUMEL's heirs, and I told him GEORGE was her son; I never told anybody that he was not Mme. JUMEL's son, nor that I did not know who was GEO. W. BOWNE's mother; I didn't tell him that Mme. JUMEL was born in Providence, but I did tell him she was born in Cumberland; I didn't tell him that Mrs. CHANDLER was the daughter of Mme. JUMEL; I didn't tell him she was a daughter of POLLY CLARK; I told him that mother said POLLY CLARK's father was a Portuguese; this was before I saw CHASE, and before I saw the advertisement in the Herald; Mr. JUMEL was poor when I first knew him; after ward when I lived in Greenwich street, he was better off; mother and Mme. JUMEL used to talk about it; when FREELOVE BALLOU and I went there he was considered well off, but not rich.

The examination was adjourned.

SUPREME COURT—TRIAL TERM—PART II.—MARCH 27.

Before Judge Van Brunt and a Jury.

ALLEGED COMMERCIAL BAD FAITH.

H. C. Covert vs. Gardner F. Tufts et al.—This is an action to recover $5,000 and upward, as the difference between the prices which were charged by the defendant Tufts upon his books, and the price contained in the invoices forwarded to plaintiff's agents at Nassau, New-Providence. It appeared on the trial that the goods were shipped to Nassau under a contract between Covert, the plaintiff, and Tufts, one of the defendants. The latter was to purchase goods to the amount of $5,000, at fair market prices, and ship the same to Nassau on plaintiff's account. On the part of plaintiff, it was claimed that the defendants, instead of shipping the goods at fair market prices, invoiced and shipped them at nearly double what he paid in the market, and received payment accordingly; hence plaintiff brings this suit to recover back the difference. The defense set up was, that no contract had been made with the defendants' firm, of which Tufts was a member, but that an order had been given them, which, under instructions from plaintiff, had been turned over to a man named Van Schaick. The questions submitted to the jury were, whether the contract, as alleged by plaintiff, had been made; and, if so, whether overcharges, as alleged by plaintiff, had been made thereon. The jury, after a brief absence, found a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $5,164 17.

A. J. Requier for plaintiff; Post & Poor for defendants.

MONDAY, March 27—P. M.

The rapid progress of the subscriptions to the New Loan, in advance of the readiness of the Bonds for delivery, and while the European agencies are not yet in working order, is felt upon the Gold market, and one or two prominent Bull operators in the Room, today, turned sellers at 110⅞@⅞ ₱ cent. The impression gains ground that by the 1st of May, when the New Bonds will be ready for market on both sides the Atlantic, they will be more than equal to the par in American Gold dollars, and will, to an important extent, supersede the shipments of the latter in settlement of trade balances. In the intervening four or five weeks, however, this influence upon the Exchanges on London and the Continent can only be partially felt. The rates on London, today, are reported firm, but the business in the open market not important. London Credits are being settled on the basis of 109⅞@⅞ ₱ cent.

Money keeps abundant and cheap, 4@5 ₱ cent. per annum to the Brokers on loans subject to call or demand, and 5@6 ₱ cent. on short time negotiations.

The Stock Exchange is much excited on three or four of the Western Railways, and generally firm throughout the New-York and Western list. The very heavy transactions of last week in Lake Shore Stock are succeeded today by enormous sales and purchases at the Exchange Board and in the Long Room of the Exchange, at a further rise in price from 101⅞@102@101⅞@102 ₱ cent. The whole operations of the day are scarcely short of one-tenth of the Capital, or say 30,000 to 35,000 shares. While there have been hints thrown out of a lease of the Road, after an extra or Scrip Dividend, to the New-York Central Company, which are at least premature, there is no secret in the Street as to the effect of another powerful reason on the price of and demand for the Stock—to wit, the short line of one or more wealthy operators, who have, of late, moved with great boldness in selling the Stock for future delivery, or selling for cash and borrowing the Stock, at figures 6@10 ₱ cent. below the present price. The story further runs that the same parties have sold "privileges" or "calls" upon the Stock to the extent of twenty or thirty thousand shares. The other points of interest today were the St. Pauls, North-wests, and Rock Island, all of which were further advanced on Saturday's sales. New-York Central and Scrip were firm, but attracted less interest than the Western lines. Among the latter, Ohio and Mississippi was comparatively quiet.

In other departments of the Stock Exchange, the Public funds were somewhat weak, in sympathy with Gold. The Southern State Bonds steady. The Railway Mortgages well supported; the Miscellaneous Shares firm in prices, but less animated than last week.

After the late Boards the following quotations were made as compared with Saturday night. There was some abatement of the excitement in the Western Roads, but the market left off strong:

The Philadelphia Ledger says of the Coal trade:

"Practically, the anthracite coal difficulties are almost entirely the same as this day two weeks ago. The mining and shipping of anthracite coal are pursuits just now of little importance. The little doing does not increase the supply of coal for domestic uses at any point, and the stock of coal from supplies before production ceased is gradually wearing away. Notwithstanding this, the coal markets is quite free from excitement, and the prices of coal have advanced scarcely any. Public attention is directed to Harrisburg and to the legislative investigation making there into the cause of the coal difficulties. A number of persons connected with the several interests in the trade, —representatives of the miners and workmen, coal operators and officers of the carrying companies,—have all been examined, and the Committee on the Judiciary have made a preliminary report, in which is recommended the system of 'arbitration' as a means of adjusting the difficulties that may now exist or hereafter arise between the miners and workmen and the coal operators. This recommendation has been tested as wise in practice in England, and would no doubt prove so here if put in operation in a proper spirit. It is earnestly hoped by all interests in the trade that the more prominent manner in which the subject is now brought to the attention of the workmen will induce them to give it heed, and for their own good, as well as for the true interests of the trade, adopt it as the cheaper and more satisfactory mode of redressing grievances. The two interests are not antagonistic, as every intelligent man knows, and all those who attempt to teach differently should be discarded as demagogues and enemies of both labor and capital. As it is, well known that all the parties to the strife are heartily sick of it, there is reason to hope that the proposition of 'arbitration' may be availed of as the happiest means of ending it. Inasmuch as it avoids any yielding of a point contended for, usually a great stumbling-block in settling disputes, it possesses advantages even in advance of the intrinsic merit of the proposition itself. To-morrow or next day the Judiciary Committee will hear the parties in the carrying interest, including, probably, a summing up of the whole issue in a speech by Mr. GOWAN, of the Reading Railroad, when the investigation will end. Some of our contemporaries are endeavoring to trace back the acts of the several parties in the trade to find the original cause of the existing trouble, to discover the party most culpable. This is difficult, and useless, were it possible. Let the

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Communists are reported to have achieved a triumph at the Paris election on Sunday, and it is thought that the revolution will spread to all the large towns of France in a week. There is a rumor that the Duc D'Aumale will succeed M. THIERS. An order has been issued for the arrest of Gen. GARIBALDI upon his appearance in France. Gen. LE FLO retires from the Foreign Office, and is succeeded by CLERMBAULT. Orders have been given for the levy of mobilized volunteers. Fifteen battalions of the National Guard cut of twenty-four at Lyons are sent to support the Commune, and the new Government has been proclaimed there.

The negotiations for a final treaty of peace between France and Germany will commence, probably, this week at Brussels....A bill is to be introduced into the German Parliament providing for the enforcement of the authority of the Emperor over Alsace and Lorraine after Jan. 1, 1872....LOUIS NAPOLEON visited Queen VICTORIA at Windsor Castle yesterday....A Republican band has made its appearance in Lerida, Spain. ....The King of Sweden is quite ill....The bill making marriage with a deceased wife's sister legal, was rejected in the British House of Commons yesterday.

CUBA.

A Havana telegram brings a report of a series of engagements in the Eastern Department, in which the insurgents lost 100 in killed alone. The Cuban Gen. ACOSTA is said to have been killed near Bayamo. A decree is published in Havana, ordering the imposition of an export duty, after April 1, on sugar, molasses, wax, rum, raw tobacco, segars, lumber, and after July 1, an import duty of ten per cent. on all goods.

CONGRESS.

The time of the Senate was chiefly occupied yesterday by the speech of Mr. SUMNER on the resolutions recently submitted by him regarding the use of naval forces in the waters near San Domingo. It was a fierce attack upon the Administration and the negotiations for the acquisition of the island. Mr. MORTON made a brief reply sustaining the policy of the President, after which the Senate adjourned.

In the House a number of new bills were introduced, including one for the reduction of taxation, one to secure suffrage in Utah, without distinction of race or sex, one to put the mission to Russia on an equal footing with those to England, France and Germany, and one to establish the Territory of Pembina. Mr. HIBBARD, of New-Hampshire, introduced the resolutions submitted by Mr. COX, declaring what the financial policy of the country should be. The House refused to lay the first resolution on the table by a vote of 9 to 189, but soon after, a motion to adjourned prevailed. The resolutions are in favor of taxation for revenue only and a reduction of expenses.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

Both branches met last night. A bill was introduced in the Senate by Mr. TWEED to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in New-York City, and to provide proper care and treatment for those affected by them. The Canal Appropriation bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole, and ordered to a third reading. The bill providing for the payment of the principal and interest of the canal debt was also ordered to a third reading. In the Assembly, the New-York Viaduct Railway bill was taken up in Committee of the Whole. Amendments requiring directors to be stockholders, and the subscription of $5,000,000, in addition to the City's $5,000,000, before work should begin, were rejected. An amendment, prohibiting consolidation with other railway companies, and its directors from being directors of other roads, was adopted. Progress was reported, with the understanding that the bill could be taken up at any time. The bill to prevent fraud in the sale of coal in New-York was passed.

GENERAL.

St. Louis detectives are confident that they are on the track of FORRESTER, the much-sought-for suspected NATHAN murderer. They believe him to be hidden in or about Memphis.

It snowed all Sunday night and part of yesterday in Poughkeepsie.

We are indebted to the Captain and Purser of the Hamburg-American steam-ship Silesia, now at this port, for valued additions to our commercial files.

A severe easterly storm of snow and rain prevailed in the eastern portions of Massachusetts all day yesterday. In portions of Maine and New-Hampshire from one to two inches of snow covers the ground.

The New-Jersey House of Representatives met with but thirty-three members and immediately adjourned. The Senate was occupied with routine business. A Trenton telegram says it is now generally understood that but little, if any, effort will be made to pass the Jersey City charter over the Governor's veto, and it will probably not be taken up.

The Supreme Court of the United States, yesterday, confirmed the title of the State of Kentucky to jurisdiction over Wolf's Island, in the Mississippi River, as derived from the Virginia Company.

The New-York Times.

"We are informed that negotiations are in progress for the sale of the NEW-YORK TIMES to a company, in which Mr. PETER COOPER, MORRIS TAYLOR, CYRUS W. FIELD, A. OAKEY HALL, JAMES FISK, Jr., JAY GOULD, PETER B. SWEENY and WILLIAM M. TWEED are to be the principal stockholders. The present managers of the establishment will leave as soon as the purchase is concluded. The intention of those who propose to buy is to run the paper for the present ostensibly in the Republican interest; but as soon as the Hon. A. O'HALL has completed his term as Mayor he will become the editor, and then the political character of the concern will doubtless be changed. We learn, also, that the first overtures for this transaction were made by GEORGE JONES, through a third party, to Mr. SWEENY, about six months ago, but that the plan has not been entertained until recently."

The above statement appears in a journal which is said to be controlled by the Tammany Ring.

It is my duty to say that the assertion that I have ever offered to dispose of my property in the TIMES to Mr. SWEENY, or anybody connected with him, or that I have ever entered into negotiations for that purpose, or am ever likely to do so, directly or indirectly, is a fabrication from beginning to end. I am aware that Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS, Secretary of the Citizens' Association, has been for some time actively engaged in the effort to purchase or otherwise silence this journal, in the interest of his Tammany employers. But believing that the course which the TIMES is pursuing is that which the interests of the great body of the public demand, and that it would be a base betrayal of the public to turn aside from that course until an honest government and an incorruptible judiciary are restored to the community, no money that could be offered should induce me to dispose of a single share of my property to the Tammany faction, or to any man associated with it—or, indeed, to any person or party whatever until this struggle is fought out. I have the same confidence in the integrity and firmness of my fellow-proprietors, and believe that they will decline to sell their honor to a corrupt clique at the instigation of "Republicans" who are as unprincipled as their employers.

Rather than prove false to the public in the present crisis, I would, if necessity by any possibility arose, immediately start another journal to denounce those frauds upon the people which are so great a scandal to the City; and I should carry with me in this renewal of our present labors the colleagues who have already stood by me through a long and arduous contest. Even if the TIMES could be silenced by some fresh abuse of judicial authority, as I believe it cannot be, it would not cause a week's cessation of the exposures which we are now making of the frauds committed by the "Ring." I have from the first number of the TIMES taken too active a part in its management, and feel far too deep a solicitude for its good name, to dishonor it by making it the advocate of mendacity and corruption. I pledge myself to persevere in the present contest, under all and any circumstances that may arise, through good report and evil report, in success or in failure; and even though the "Ring" and its friends offered me for my interest in the property as many millions of dollars as they annually plunder from the City funds, it would not change my purpose. This determination is, I have every reason to believe, fully shared by my co-proprietors, and by the staff who act with me in the paper.

GEORGE JONES.

The Next Move of the "Ring."

The foregoing statement is a sufficient answer to one particular slander which TWEED and SWEENY have set afloat; but if any of our contemporaries are anxious to experience the pleasures incidental to a systematic attack upon the powerful body now ruling this City, they cannot do better than come and spend a few days in our office. We put aside the threats of personal violence which we constantly receive as unworthy a moment's consideration; but there are other "amenities" which we are forced to notice. In the first place, it will surprise many Republicans who still have faith in men like Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS and the members of the Citizens' Association, to learn that their agents have been for some time actively at work to suppress a Republican journal. We have been quite aware of the existence and progress of these conspiracies, but have refrained from calling attention to them, on the principle that a newspaper has no business to bring its affairs before the notice of the public. But as we have now received a sort of "first warning" from the Ring and its Republican allies, and as the matter really does closely concern the public, and all who have any property at stake in this City, we shall be pardoned for making a brief explanation.

Everybody knows that great corporations have ere now been driven out of the City by the use of "injunctions" and "receiverships," obtained through the instrumentality of compliant Courts. The same tactics are to be tried with us. Mr. NATHANIEL SANDS and other "Republicans" have been going about trying to obtain, on one false pretense or another, a few shares in this journal. Thus far they have failed—for there is no proprietor of the paper who does not fully approve of its course in attacking the present local misgovernment. Notwithstanding these failures, however, an application is still to be made to one or other of the Judges for a process which is designed to render the "Ring" masters of this journal. After what was done with the Union Pacific Company, and the sixty thousand Erie shares held by foreign proprietors, and the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad, no one can say that it would be impossible to get a Judge to issue an order empowering a band of ruffians to walk in and take possession of our property. We can only distinctly notify to all persons concerned that they shall have a hard fight for it. There will be no surrender of our rights, even under compulsion. What money can do we shall try; what resistance can do we shall also try; and we can promise a bad time to anybody who makes the hazardous experiment of striking a blow at the freedom of the Press. The move, however, is to be made—so NATHANIEL SANDS and his dear Republican and Tammany backers boast—and we are prepared to meet it. We shall see what Judge will be willing to grant such an order as they contemplate asking for within ten days. In the meantime, we invite the public to judge for themselves how far the Citizens' Association, NATHANIEL SANDS, Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS, and the other parties to the plot, are entitled to be considered honest members of the Republican Party. We expect violence and outrage from the Sweeny faction. But even Mr. PETER COOPER must be a little staggered to find his bosom friend SANDS engaged in a villainous intrigue to bribe, gag, or suppress a Republican journal. We believe we may count with confidence upon having the public with us in the impending struggle, and we include in that public all honest and reputable members of the Democratic Party.

Paris Under the Communists.

The overwhelming Communist majority in the Paris elections does not necessarily involve a practical renewal of the tenets of ST. SIMON and FOURIER—a new social organization, and a reapportionment of property. It simply means that the mob of Paris has decided that the capital shall be an independent and sovereign city, with unquestioned power to manage its own affairs in its own way, and to treat on the footing of a self-governed community with the general Government. Paris held a position somewhat similar from 1789 to 1794. The National Guard of Paris owed its creation to the first insurrectionary movement of the Commune, and now seeks to repeat the process that made the capital a unit with an army in its pay. As observers on the spot have noted, the real object of the patriots of Montmartre has been to secure the continued payment of thirty sous a day, which the period of the siege taught them to depend on. The Republic has no Baron HAUSSMANN to find the means of employing some thousands of artisans at the expense of the city, and M. THIERS and his colleagues are too moderate and far-seeing to adopt the short-lived remedy of national workshops for the men who have got up an insurrection for the sake of thirty sous a day. In a crisis like the present, the stolid apathy of the well-disposed inhabitants of Paris can only be equaled by that of the well-to-do citizens of New-York. They preserve a highly-comfortable faith in circumstances, and seem to have but one intelligible ground of confidence, namely, that when things came to the worst they are sure to mend.

Unfortunately, the approaching establishment of the Commune in Paris is only the beginning of the worst. The model Commune of the Middle Ages was invested not only with the uncontrolled right of local administration, but possessed the sovereign rights of dispensing justice, making peace and war, and coining money. In the plenitude of their power, it is highly probable that the political and military charlatans who now control the capital of France will aim at nothing less. The wild work which they will make of such authority may be readily imagined. Meanwhile, M. THIERS wants a hundred thousand men whom he can trust, and by the aid of thirty sous a day, is apparently confident he can get them. But as fast as the rural Mobiles are collected, the large towns of the south and east will be following the example of Paris, and France will present the spectacle of a confederation of independent and sovereign cities, pursuing a policy which the delegates of the people cannot control, and repudiating obligations which the representatives of the nation have contracted. It is not easy to see how a sanguinary civil war can be averted under conditions like these. M. THIERS may resign, and the Duke of AUMALE may, though that is highly improbable, take his place. But still the problem remains who is to be master in France? Concede the autonomy of a few large towns, and France sinks into more than mediæval weakness. It is no longer a nation, but a bear-garden of contending factions—a State settling down into chaos, and ripe for another despot with his "whiff of grapeshot." Civil conflict, even if long and bloody, would be better than this.

Italian Opera.

It is settled, we are told, that a short season of Italian Opera will be given at the Academy, beginning in April. The material is to be furnished chiefly from Havana, although negotiations are said to be in progress with some artists now in Europe who, it is hoped, may strengthen the lyric forces engaged. Fifty prosperous representations already witnessed by the critical audience of Havana are mentioned as earnest of the merit of the artists soon to appear before us. The chief names of the singers include Signora IDA VISCONTI, the soprano; Signor VALLANI, who, from the accounts, is a tenor of force; and Signor CAROZELLI, who is rated as a tenor di grazia. We discern, in these limited announcements, the old risk of defect in basses and baritones; and hope that those interested will take warning for their own sake as well as that of the public, and avoid running on one of the worst rocks that has lately proved fatal to operatic adventure.

What New-York needs, as we have repeatedly insisted before, are first-class products in this as in all walks of art. It is idle to offer a fifth-rate operatic entertainment, and then, because the public fail to support it, to say that the public will not support Italian opera at all. The number of people in New-York who can understand and appreciate music of the best order is very great; and of these the proportion who are exceedingly fond of opera is notoriously large. In behalf of this numerous body of sincere lovers of the lyric drama, we protest against the injurious conclusions that penny-wise and incapable managers have striven to establish against the musical taste of the Metropolis. Such conclusions may serve as temporary cover to discreditable failures, but they are essentially calumniatory and delusive. In partial evidence of this may be cited the demonstrable fact, that for years in New-York no public entertainment of really good quality has failed to meet liberal encouragement. We do not hear complaints that Wallack's and Booth's and the Fifth-avenue Theatres fail to get paying houses. And why? Because, whatever close criticism may urge against the performance of particular plays, the energy, taste, and liberality with which they are brought out, are always to be depended upon. The public know exactly what, at these houses, they have to expect; and the consequence is a steady flow of patronage, which is as constant and regular as the custom of any old-established and highly-respected mercantile firm. Whenever an opera-house throws open its doors in New-York, which shall be as steadily well conducted as the theatres mentioned, its business may be depended upon with equal confidence.

In London, the programmes of one of the two great Italian operas have just appeared, and a perusal of it inspires regret that New-York has not, by this time, at least one house of established repute where the lyric drama is permanently established. Mr. GYE, at the Royal Italian Opera, has gained the services—as a consequence of the French war—of Mme. MEOLAN-CARVALHO and M. JOURDAIN. He loses THIERNS and MARIO, for the latter great tenor is to retire definitely from the stage, at last, during June, first singing a number of his most famous parts; but MONGINI is to attempt to replace MARIO, opening, this evening, in Edgardo, in "Lucia," and is to sing Arnold in "William Tell" later in the season. The list of ladies includes Mmes. ADELINA PATTI, PAULINE LUCCA, PAREPA-ROSA, SESSI, MONBELLI and ORGENI; besides the new acquisition already named. Among the baritones are M. FAURE and MM. GRAZIANI and COTOGNI, and Signor CIAMPI is the first buffo. We give these names by way of showing what is now thought needful to constitute a good operatic company. It should be understood that, up to June, Signors MARIO and MONGINI will both be of the company, and that the name of Signor BETTINI should be added to it.

We are, of course, not ignorant of the special difficulties to be encountered in bringing artists of rank to this country. These difficulties are not to be despised, it must be admitted, yet there ought to be enterprise enough among us to meet and conquer them. If a European city can sustain two companies such as those of Messrs. GYE and MAPLESON, the capital of the Western World ought surely to sustain one. And we do not doubt for a moment that New-York can and, if she has the chance, will do so. The misfortune here is, that the greater and richer the Metropolis has become, the worse has been its Italian opera; and that, with each fresh failure, as it has sunk to lower depths than before, the cry has been made more sharp and emphatic that such representations cannot be made to pay. With this assurance constantly dinned into their ears, those who might have ability to grapple with the problem, and solve it in a way to confer a great boon on the public while securing fortune for themselves, naturally hold aloof. They may be certain, nevertheless, that when Italian opera is presented as it ought to be, the people of New-York will support it with even lavish generosity. There are no theatres elsewhere, devoted to the English drama, in which profits have been steadily greater, or, as we believe, as great as in New-York during the past ten years; and when opera is done as well as plays are done in these theatres the same results will, in all probability, be attained. There must, however, be no slips or botches in the work. The time has gone by here for "second-chop" Italian opera.

Protection for Sailors on the High Seas.

Charges of cruelty to sailors on shipboard have been so frequent of late as to merit some attention. Within the present month three cases have been tried in the Admiralty Courts of this City, in which the Captains and officers of vessels have been accused of the harshest treatment of their men. In two of these cases, those of the Old Colony and the Neptune, the charge has taken the form of a direct complaint against the officers; in the third, the case of the whaler Robert Edwards, it was introduced as mitigation of the offense for which certain of the crew were tried and once convicted—mutiny and arson on the high seas. A similar case to this last is now reported from New-Orleans, where six of the crew of the ship Saint James, arrested for mutiny, allege that they were forced to the act by the continued inhumanity of the Captain and first mate. In all four instances the complaints are of the same stereotyped nature. The men assert that they were compelled to go aloft when sick and unable to work; that medicine, and sometimes even proper food, was refused them; that on slight provocation they were beaten with belaying pins, knocked down and kicked. Two of the crew of the Saint James are said to have died of starvation and neglect while sick. A sailor of the Robert Edwards is said to have jumped overboard to escape the brutality of his superiors. On one of the other vessels, it is asserted, a man was driven by the same cause to attempt suicide by hanging himself in the rigging. And on the trial of Capt. GRINDLE, of the Old Colony, it was testified by one of the witnesses that he falsely accused two of his victims of a design to burn the ship, so as to forestall any complaint they might make ashore.

Now, we do not purpose expressing any opinion on the rights of these particular cases. Three of them have already been tried before a competent tribunal, and the verdict in each instance has been in favor of the masters and against the crew. To be sure, in Capt. GRINDLE's case this favorable decision was not so very favorable after all; for the jury, being a conscientious and precise, as well as intelligent jury, found him "not guilty under the statute and the ruling, but guilty of cruelty." This the unappreciative Court, regardless of the perplexities of intelligent and conscientious jurors, brusquely reduced to a verdict of "not guilty," and Capt. GRINDLE went free. Accepting these judicial decisions freely and without reservation, as entirely exculpating the quarter-deck and condemning the forecastle, the recurrence of these complaints, however groundless, suggests that in other cases they might be made with greater reason. The investigation of the James Foster, Jr., a year or two ago, showed that all sea Captains are not so humane as Capt. PEABODY and Capt. GRINDLE, and that even mutiny might almost have its justification. Since the discovery and punishment of these sickening atrocities, ships' officers have been either kinder or more cautious in their treatment of the men committed to their charge. At least, we do not now recall any case since that of the James Foster, Jr., in which the Captain or mate of a vessel has been convicted of gross brutality to his men. Still, what has been may be again; and the fear is that these recent decisions, however just in themselves, will serve to encourage the ruffians who undoubtedly here and there hold places of authority in our merchant service, to more open gratification of their cowardly and murderous instincts.

How to prevent this, what measures to take which shall insure at once to the officers the preservation of discipline, and to the crew protection from violence, it is not easy to say. Yet that some legislation for the purpose is necessary, this ominous succession of complaints seems clearly to indicate. The subject is beset with serious difficulties. On the one hand a ship's Captain at sea is, and ought to be, for the security of the lives and property intrusted to his care, an absolute autocrat. Unlimited power of any sort brings strong temptations to its abuse, and while we are willing to believe that a great majority of our merchant Captains are honorable and kind-hearted men, it is easy to see that, with the exceptions to this rule, the sailor runs a risk of faring hardly. Besides, much of the real disciplinary power on shipboard is exercised by the petty officers, and delegated authority among the rude and ignorant is almost sure to be tyrannical. On the other hand, sailors are, no doubt, often shiftless and idle or unruly and mutinous, when it needs a strong hand to keep them to their duty. To stand on the exact line where moral force merges into physical, to be resolute without being violent, is a power not given to many men, and probably not to all sea Captains. Perhaps it is not within the province of any possible legislation to secure that combination of kindness and firmness of consideration in the superior, with fidelity in the inferior, which ought to make the law among all sea-faring folk. But no pains should be left untried to bring about this desirable result, and if, short of the millennium, any revision or improvement of our naval system is equal to enforce it, that resource should be tried at once.

A New Democratic Grievance.

The Democratic element in the State of South Carolina has a new and strange cause of complaint. Taxes are imposed without adequate representation. In South Carolina, as in many other States, the voting outnumbers the taxable population. In this instance, it is a result of the acts of the complainants themselves. The wealthy people of South Carolina embraced, almost as a unit, the cause of the rebellion. Having been rebels, they were deprived of citizenship. To most of them, however, political privileges have been restored. Previous to the rebellion, all power was in the hands of the class now complaining. The enfranchisement of the negro has for a time transferred political control from the master to his former chattel. This is the chief grievance. Taxation without representation is a catch-word to conceal the real purpose of the movement, which is to deprive the negro, as far as may be possible, of the right of suffrage, and augment the strength of the Democratic Party.

In the General Assembly of South Carolina the negroes outnumber the whites, and a large majority of the whites represent negro constituencies. Property, though represented, is in so small a minority as to be without influence. Property desires to regain its old position and influence, but those who are interested in this result do not come out openly and say how it is to be brought about. The idea of a purely property representation is opposed to the fundamental principles of the Government. Before the rebellion, it was a cause of constant complaint on the part of the North that the slave, for all other purposes a chattel, was counted a man in the apportionment of Representatives in Congress. Not possessing slaves now, the ex-rebel of South Carolina wishes to have his lands and houses, his flocks and herds, represented. How should the basis of representation be established? Should the property-owner be allowed votes for three-fifths of his wealth? Then Gen. KERSHAW, or some other ex-insurgent, having elected himself by his own votes, would represent a constituency of plantation horses, mules, cows, hens and chickens.

Preposterous as the idea of property representation is, it is of value as betraying the designs of the Democracy of the South. A quarrel is to be fastened on the Republican Party. One grievance is no sooner satisfied than another takes its place. Gov. SCOTT, willing to make every sacrifice for peace sake, and perhaps wishing to test the sincerity of the Democratic overtures, yielded to every suggestion of the delegation of eighteen, of which the ex-rebel Gen. KERSHAW was the head. Near the end of the conference, the Governor was informed that the concessions made were not sufficient—that lost power must be restored to the wealthy classes of South Carolina. This demand simply means that control of the legislation of the State should be given into the hands of Democrats who are willing to serve the "lost cause." In South Carolina, however, the negro vote is in the majority, and it is unlikely that this majority will abridge its right of suffrage. Refusal may, perhaps, bring down the vengeance of the Kukluxes, new outrages will be committed, having as an excuse the infringement of the negro on the rights of the whites. The Democracy, to be consistent, must defend their brethren of South Carolina, and thus help to build up an aristocracy, while claiming to be the friend of the laboring classes.

MINOR TOPICS.

Our liberal export of war materiel to France during the late struggle was, on the whole, taken very good-humoredly by the Germans. But munition on which we reaped the profit. But now comes the German Correspondent, and with an amiable desire of obliterating any remaining unpleasantness, gives us the unkindest cut of all. We are gravely informed that the supplies in question did them little harm and their losses little good. Moreover, it remorselessly continues, "the clothing furnished to the French troops from beyond the Atlantic was made from 'shoddy,' so that if a soldier accidentally stumbled, his knees instantaneously made their way through his trowsers, and a coat had to be put on with the greatest care and tenderness, lest the arms should suddenly part company with the body." As if this were not enough, the semi-official print says that the rifles were chiefly of the class made "to sell," and were very dangerous weapons—to those who fired them. We are much gratified at the conclusion come to that Germans cannot accuse the venders of these stores of unfriendliness, but the mode in which it has been arrayed at ought clearly to be made the subject of a diplomatic remonstrance.

The Methodist preachers are doing a good work in calling attention to the unhealthy tone of society induced by an excessive fondness for amusements. It is perfectly true, as stated by one speaker, that "the lust of gain and overgrowth has largely withdrawn the cultivated and refined from the circle of government, and left its reins in the hands of the worst men among us." But the preachers endanger the very reform they so strenuously advocate by including under their censure forms of enjoyment not essentially and necessarily harmful. The sumptuary laws of a past epoch, that attempted to regulate what a man should eat and drink, and how he should be clothed, were not only vexatious and inquisitorial, but they did infinite harm, because they helped to vitiate the popular conscience by confounding matters of trivial import with vital and eternal obligations. As MACAULAY long ago pointed out, any system of law or morals that places duties of doubtful authority on the same level as unquestioned truths, helps to make great criminals by increasing the number of small ones. All friends of social regeneration must desire to see the Christian pulpit avoid any such danger.

An ingenious Frenchman has just hit upon a very happy invention, which cannot fail to be immediately tested at home, and which ought, thereafter, to claim the immediate attention of the Congress of the United States. It is called a "mechanical calm-restorer," and is intended to introduce into public meetings "a voluntary discipline indispensable to freedom of discussion." The inventor maintains that the use of the voice or bell or hammer by a Chairman is essentially defective—first, because they fail to make noise enough, and second, because in a greater or less degree they betray the impatience of the person employing them, and can hardly fail to excite it. An instrument which is at once passionless, self-registering, and calculated to make a dreadful din, combines the requisites of moral and material influence. Should the President of a popular assembly experience the slightest difficulty in obtaining the needful silence, he has but to open the box containing the calm-restorer, set the hand of an supposed dial in motion, and at the end of each revolution of one minute there is produced a noisy peal of bells sounding for a few seconds, and most effectually drowning every other sound in the room. During this operation the session is considered as suspended, and by registering the number of revolutions an accurate idea can be obtained of the extent of the disorder, and the consequent loss of time.

We publish this morning another series of selections from the Southern Press, showing the drift of Democratic opinion in that part of the country. JEFFERSON DAVIS has been on a tour through Alabama, and though he announced that he dared not speak as he felt, enough was said and published to show that there is still in the South no small number of friends of the "lost cause," who still hope for its success. At the South nothing is regarded as settled by the war, and not one of its results is accepted. Reconstruction measures and the amendments to the Constitution are to be "accepted and treated as dead issues for the courts," and then, if the Democracy gain the ascendency, the work of "unsettling" is to commence, and the country be restored to its condition before the war.

The preliminary statistics on manufactures and farming, supplied by the Census Bureau, are eminently suggestive. The phrase "establishments of productive industry," must of course be received with due deductions when taken as an indication of material progress. A merely numerical percentage, that gives to the smallest of workshops the same importance as the largest, must, in the absence of other details, be of only partial value. Even on this basis, however, it is instructive to note that Nebraska heads the list with an increase over 1860 of 322 per cent.; that Kansas follows with 224 per cent.; then Minnesota with 223 per cent., and Oregon with 207 per cent. For da interupts the series of Western growth with an increase of 203 per cent., but the West again takes the lead, giving Missouri, Iowa, Illinois and Indiana an increase varying from 243 to 119 per cent. In all the thirty-three States and Territories enumerated there has been an increase in the number of establishments of productive industry, North Carolina coming in at the bottom of the list with 1 per cent. In the number of hands employed, Massachusetts shows a falling off of 5 per cent., and New-Hampshire of 2 per cent. In all the other States and Territories mentioned there is an increase—Kansas being at the head of the list with 236 per cent., Nebraska following with 226, and Minnesota with 221 per cent.

Mr. SUMNER delivered, in the Senate, yesterday, his speech on the annexation of San Domingo. The speech is so long as to preclude its publication entire, unless we excluded news of perhaps equal value and importance. We give, however, a carefully-prepared and extended summary of it. The speech shows signs of careful preparation, but contains nothing that we have not all heard before. The facts adduced by Mr. SUMNER scarcely warrant the conclusions he draws from them, and utterly fail in establishing the absurd charge of "complicity" against President GRANT. The line of argument is the same as that which was employed in former speeches on that subject. Mr. SUMNER's oration will, however, be read with the attention due to his character, and when the Commissioners' report is presented we hope the whole subject will be left to the impartial judgment of the people.

The EX-EMPEROR NAPOLEON III. is evidently still remembered in England as "our loyal ally." The illustrious exile has been received at Windsor, and lastly cheered by a crowd of people in the grounds of the Castle. It is extremely probable that the English Government would be very glad to see the Emperor reinstated in the Tuileries. One of the cardinal dogmas of a French republic will be hatred to England for the weakness and treacherous of her policy at the crisis of their great struggle. A breach of the reciprocity treaty of commerce will, so long certainly, be one of the first acts of the financial policy of France. The Emperor believed in the mutual profit of an interchange of products with England, while there may at the head of affairs do not. In other respects, he was consistently enough the friend of the nation across the Channel, and it is, so far, to their credit that they have not forgotten it.

"BIRTH" AT WALLACK'S THEATRE.

After being underlined for many weeks, "Birth" was acted last night at Wallack's Theatre. The comedy has been looked for with much anxiety, and drew a capital house. "Birth" is a work the paternity of which is instantly obvious. It is pervaded through and through with the Robertsonian spirit. Without producing any very powerful emotion, it yet is so managed as to retain attention and leave an agreeable impression. Judging from a first hearing, however, "Birth" will not rank with the author's ablest comedies. It is too fragile in structure, and for all its clever dove-tailing of situation and whimsical repartee, too conventional for such a classification. One proof of the latter defect consists in the fact that of all ROBERTSON's pieces, in "Birth" are the incidents most readily anticipated. The story is one, in truth, that has already, in the main, been worn threadbare. The contrast between blue blood in poverty and obscurity flitting up to wealth, of the aristocracy that is fadiar into twilight, and the democracy that looms up brightly in the morning horizon, is already familiar. ROBERTSON himself has done much of late to make it so; and the last illustration given to us can hardly be called the best. There is, nevertheless, a great deal of fun and a great deal of excitement in "Birth." Mr. WALLACK'S part in particular being excessively amusing and remarkably well acted, and the assemblage that witnessed its first representation were, to all appearance, greatly delighted with it. We shall endeavor to do justice to the comedy in detail at a more convenient opportunity; contenting ourselves for the present by observing that whatever faults it may discover to the critical eye, "Birth" is undeniably well calculated to please a general audience.

Musical.

MISS NILSSON IN BROOKLYN.

Miss NILSSON sang in presence of a very large audience gathered at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, last evening. "Casta Diva" and "Ved Che Sapete" were the lady's advertised solos, and were supplemented as liberally as usual. To-night and to-morrow the company will be heard in Philadelphia.

MASTER GOLDSMITH'S RECITATIONS.

The third of Master GOLDSMITH's clever recitations from SHAKESPEARE will be given, at the Chickering Rooms, in Fourteenth-street, this evening.

NEW-YORK CIRCUS.

The numerous attractions of the regular entertainment at the New-York Circus were added to last evening by the first appearance in the arena of a monkey, who succeeds, and will doubtless rival, the Irish cynocephalus. A more hideous brute than this Irish "quadrumanous man," as the Parisians were wont to call the very legendary creature, has never been looked upon, either in the ring or the menagerie. And the fact that it is paraded indicates that the ugliness of its temper is scarcely exceeded by that of its form and features. On the other hand, it is reasonably intelligent, and when it becomes more familiar with the sight of an audience than it apparently to be last night, it will probably go through its paces with becoming alacrity. The absence of its trainer, yesterday, disconcerted it somewhat, but its equestrian provenance were distinct enough to please, notwithstanding their slightly delayed performance. Mlle. CAROLINE ROLLAND, Master GEORGE DONALD and Mr. MELVILLE continue to ride at the New-York Circus. The LEVANTINES figure among the company in a capital horizontal bar act, and some wonderful hoisting and leaping is done. The programme offered this week is unquestionably the best of the season.

A New-England Society in Georgia Disbanded.

The Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle & Sentinel, recording the fact that a few days ago the surviving members of what was known for many years as the New-England Society of Augusta, met and disbanded, says: "The Society alluded to was first started by SAMUEL HALL, Esq., one of the most prominent citizens of Augusta, who died many years ago. The New-Englanders of Augusta went heartily into the scheme, and the first meeting was held in 1836. The Society prospered and flourished year by year, did many works of charity, and gave remarkably fine dinners. When the war came on this organization, like many others, had to suspend operations, a large number of its members entering the ranks of the armies of the "Lost Cause," and either fought valiantly to the close, or else left their bones to bleach on the hill-sides of Virginia. Since the termination of hostilities various causes have conspired to prevent either a reorganization of the Society or a meeting of its members.

The disbanding meeting was the first that was held in ten years, and upon examination it was found that of the many whose names appeared on the roll twelve or fifteen years ago, only twenty-one were left in the land of the living. Of these survivors, eleven—more than a majority—were present. The following are the names of those who were present: EDWARD THOMAS, Josiah Sibley, W. H. Goodrich, W. C. Gibbs, W. T. Gould, C. H. Sibley, J. Ivy, W. H. Sibley, J. S. Bean, E. A. Sibley, C. Fargo, S. H. Sibley, J. O. Mathewson. A statement from the Treasurer was revealed the fact that the funds of the Society amounted to $8,000. The disbanding of the Society having been determined upon, it was agreed by an unanimous vote to distribute the assets as follows: $3,500 was given to the Augusta Library Association, and the remaining $3,500 ordered to be appropriated to charitable purposes.

SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS.

Their Views of the Issues in the Next Campaign.

Jeff. Davis' Cordial Welcome in Alabama—What He Said to His Sympathizers and What the Papers Said to Him—The Results of the War to be Reversed.

"I dare not speak to you as I feel," said JEFFERSON DAVIS, one evening in the present month of March, to a crowd of his sympathizing serenaders, in Mobile, and these—coming, perhaps, as near his unspoken thought as he dared—he praised the conduct of the Mobile troops in the war, asserting that, so long as the Alabama rolls to the sea, so long will their heroism and bravery live in his memory, and be cherished in his heart. Leaving Mobile, "the illustrious statesman and hero," as the Montgomery Advertiser calls him, proceeded to Montgomery, and the editor of that paper hastened to inform his readers that, having had the honor of shaking him by the hand and enjoying for an hour his delightful conversation, he had come to the conclusion that there is "no living man in America whose career has been more interesting, noble and patriotic, and who more deserves the respect and affection of the Southern people." And again, in another article alluding to the serenade given him in Montgomery, the Advertiser says that "no man, living or dead, ever stood higher in the esteem and love of the South than does President DAVIS." Not to be behind its contemporary, the Montgomery Mail, says that every demonstration of respect was made to this distinguished citizen, who is esteemed and loved by every true Southern man and woman, and that Montgomery honored herself in extending a hearty welcome to nature's nobleman, JEFFERSON DAVIS. Thence he proceeded to Selma, and there for some reason, he dared speak more plainly what he felt. He held a public reception at a hotel on the evening of the 20th inst., which drew together "a large portion of the best people of Selma." "The parlor of the hotel"—we quote from the Selma Times & Messenger, an excellent Southern Democratic authority,—"was jammed for several hours by those who had gone there to do honor to the man who was our chosen leader in our terrible civil war. There was but one sentiment manifested by all, and that was of affection and esteem for the man who guided the infant nation in her brief but brilliant career." Later in the evening he was serenaded by a brass band, accompanied by a large number of the citizens. He responded in a short speech from the verandah, and, as we read further in the Times & Messenger, "He touched the hearts of all by the kind and affectionate manner in which he spoke of Alabama, the Southern people and the 'lost cause.' He said that he could not address them as fellow-citizens, as he was disfranchised by every count in the disfranchising act. Closing his remarks, he expressed the hope that he would yet live to see the sovereignty of the States vindicated. We express, in behalf of the people of Alabama, the hope that he may not only live to see that day, but that in that hour he may be found representing the people who love him so well. The night was an eventful one for Selma, and its occurrences show, beyond question, that Hon. JEFFERSON DAVIS yet lives in the hearts of this people."

As Selma, DAVIS still remained at latest dates, and in the leading article in the Times & Messenger, of Tuesday morning last, he read: "Wherever Mr. DAVIS goes now in these States, lately united under his public administration, there will he be received and held and honored as the symbol of the ancient renown, the cause that is lost, the hopes that are buried, the dead that fell under the stars and bars, the humiliation of a proud people crushed beneath the victor's ruthless heel, of proud memories and glorious recollections—of all of which Southern men and women think and feel in connection with the past, and when he shall have gone from among us, Southern hearts will worship at his shrine until a race of bastards shall have succeeded to the heroes of 1861-65, and truth, and honor and manhood shall have been scourged hence."

These extracts from leading Democratic papers in Alabama may furnish matter for thought to loyal men North and South. In addition we give extracts showing the drift of political opinion in the South as manifested in leading articles published within a few days past in representative Southern Democratic journals.

The assertion that any considerable number of the Southern Democrats repudiate the extreme views that have been enunciated by Judge LINTON STEPHENS, of Georgia, is vehemently denied by the Mobile Register, which says it can see no reason why the reconstruction questions should not be an engrossing political topic now, just as they were the first four years after the war, and it tells its Northern friends that the Southern Democracy demand (this is the favorite word,) nothing more than the National Democracy conceded in the New-York Convention of 1868, when, in its platform, it declared these reconstruction measures "Unconstitutional, revolutionary, null and void."

The Montgomery Advertiser does not wish its readers to understand that it advises an unworthy acceptance of, or submission to, the usurpative principles in which the reconstruction measures were conceived, but it thinks expediency may demand that the Democratic Party should go into the next campaign without any written platform, and these acts and amendments "be accepted and treated as dead issues for the occasion." It says: "If some constitutional amendments have been proposed and ratified, inconsistent with our liberties, others may surely be hereafter proposed and ratified, by which the pristine purity and vigor of that instrument may be restored."

The Richmond Enquirer advises caution and prudence on the part of Virginia, suggesting that it may be her voice that will shape the policy to be pursued, and control the selection of the Democratic candidates. The Enquirer at the same time quotes approvingly from the Evening Post sentiments, which, it says, would do credit to the most conservative journal in the land, and commenting upon them says: "Here is a recognition, and a kindly one, of so much of State rights as the people at large of the Union are at present prepared to claim. More will be claimed, at a fitting time, and at length the excrescencies which have grown up under the abnormal stimulus of war, will one by one be pared away, until the Constitution in nearly its original simplicity, will be reached."

The Savannah Republican, too, quotes what it thinks is sound doctrine from the Evening Post, and then asks: "But suppose such a measure as BUTLER's bill should be passed and the Southern States should conclude to resist its execution vi et armis, will the Post pledge itself to help us? We think ourselves," it continues, "that BUTLER's Federal autocrat for every county would have a rough road to travel, if he did not meet improvised Kuklux at every corner, where they were never seen before; but the South has learned one lesson from experience and that is, never to trust the North to help her in any resistance to tyranny outside of the ballot-box."

The Macon (Ga.) Telegraph & Messenger says it cannot approve the apparent disposition on the part of the Savannah News, the Augusta Chronicle & Sentinel, and some other Georgia journals, to force an authoritative demand upon the National Democratic Convention from the State of Georgia, in the nature of an ultimatum, that it shall assume the positions of BLAIR's Broadhead letter, as recently reaffirmed by Hon. LINTON STEPHENS. And it magnanimously says that it wants to meet the Democrats of other States as equals, not as dictators, and then if the Convention, upon a fair view of the whole field, chooses to take the positions held by Mr. STEPHENS, well and good. It distinctly states that it has no fault to find with those positions in themselves considered.

The Lexington (Ky.) Press says that the Southern Democrats demand, and that they have a right to demand, that they shall not be required to accept the Reconstruction acts as accomplished facts, which they are pledged never to acquiesce or redress. It calls upon the National Democracy to realize that the day is past when they can temporize with questions of vital importance, and insisting that there should be "no authoritative indorsement or acquiescence as regards these wrongs, the consideration of which is but postponed," it says: "If the Democratic Party should succeed in carrying the elections of next year, and securing the Executive Department of the General Government, as well as that of the lower House of the Federal Legislature, it will then be in a position to pursue a policy which will restore the Government to its normal condition, and re-establish it as a Constitutional Union between sovereign and independent States."

The South Carolina papers are giving the first responses to Senator ROBERTSON's letter to four Ex-Confederate officers, appealing to them to assist in the restoration of peace. They are not reassuring. The Columbia Phœnix is willing to give him credit for good intentions, but complains that Gov. SCOTT, when calling upon leading gentlemen of the State to assist in the restoration of peace, and Mr. ROBERTSON in making a similar call, both sought to give an impression that the men appealed to are responsible for the storm that has been raised. The Charleston News expresses similar ideas, and asserts that the persecuted and half-ruined whites have obeyed the laws, and, until within the past few weeks, not a finger has been raised against the constituted authorities of the State. And the Charleston Courier, to the same effect, insists that there is not a single wrong in South Carolina which may not be traced as the direct and necessary results of bad government.

In an article declaring the Republican Party a failure and a curse, the Savannah Republican asserts that the "whole course of the Republicans, since they came into power in 1865, affords proof conclusive that they are unfit to govern a free people;" that "the late war waged upon the Southern States was a crime against both principle and policy;" that "the South cannot be warred upon with impunity," and that further legislation by Congress, such as proposed, will "make twenty Kuklux where there is new one, and but a short time will elapse before the people will be driven to civil war for the protection of their property and firesides."

The Louisville (Ky.) Jeffersonian Democrat publishes Hon. LINTON STEPHENS' speech at Augusta, Ga., declaring the reconstruction measures unconstitutional and, therefore, void, and says that "there is no help but in a readjustment of our institutions, and in a renewal of our constitutions." We quote from its comments: "The crime of reconstruction produces alienation and anarchy, and there is no escape but in restoration; aye, we go further, and demand a readjustment of our institutions upon renewed constitutions."

A bill providing that the Governor of Mississippi may direct the prosecution of a person accused of crime in some other county, when from prejudice or other cause an impartial trial can not be had in the county in which the offense was committed, has excited the ire of the Jackson Clarion, which styles it a bill of abomination, and says that it is such villainous contrivances as this that produce Kuklux organizations, and that the people "will take care of themselves by unlawful combinations against such interference with the inalienable rights of freemen as is contemplated by this iniquity." Alluding to the same bill, the Vicksburg Herald says: "If the House passes this bill, if that body of Dick Turpins concurs with the Jack Sheppards in the Senate, it will produce an abundant crop of Kuklux—Kuklux without masks! If the carpet-bag scoundrels, white and black, who are now engaged in plundering the people of Mississippi, imagine that there is no limit to the forbearance of our citizens, that they have an exhaustless stock of patience, we beg them to dismiss that idea. We tell them that our people never will submit to this last outrage." And, further: "The whole bill is a vast, monstrous, unheard-of iniquity, a colossal crime, which had its birth in the brain of a devil, and was voted for and supported by fiends and cowards whose malignity would shame the prince of evil." In order that the character of this bill, to which such violent objections are made by those who prefer packed juries chosen from the members of oath-bound Kuklux societies, may be understood, we quote its essential provision, which is: "Be it enacted, &c., that when it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Governor of this State that a felony has been committed in any county of this State, and that, owing to prejudice or other cause, an impartial Petit or Grand Jury cannot be impaneled in such county, it shall be lawful for the Governor to issue a prescript directing the prosecution, indictment, or trial of the person or persons charged with committing or being accessory to such felony, in some other county in this State, designated in such prescript," &c. It is also provided that the Governor may offer rewards, not exceeding $500 in each case, for the apprehension of accused persons. Such is this so-called "vast, monstrous and unheard-of iniquity." Were not the times so critical this violence would excite a smile on the face of every one acquainted with the practice in criminal trials in the Northern States.

Seeking to trace a parallel between France and the South the Mobile Register suggestively says: "Chastened by adversity,—bursting to revenge her defeats and her humiliations, she (France) has an issue not to be buried in oblivion, but to be kept alive; and now comes her training and drilling and slow and patient preparation for national vengeance. It may not come in another sixty-four years. But it will come. In our country a villainy, a cheat and a fraud is apotheosized as a 'dead issue' in two years after its successful perpetration."

The Montgomery Mail calls loudly for the restoration of a white man's Government, and protests against the acceptance of the idea that the South should "wait awhile," and that she should "submit to all her wrongs with uncomplaining meekness rather than imperil the success of a given party." It says that everybody knows that without the vote of the South the National Democracy will be as powerless as an infant in the grasp of a giant; and that everybody also knows that having no personal interest in negro suffrage, Northern Democrats will not push their antagonism to it unless the South demands it as a condition precedent to her support; but, if the South "stands manfully up for principle, and insists on fighting the next battle on the question of white supremacy on this continent, she will be conceded that point, and the victory will be won upon it." In another article the Mail advocates for the South a white man's Government, and desires that the Democratic Party should recognize that fact as a living issue in its platform of principles. It says: "This is a matter of vital importance to the South and cannot in any sense be considered a dead issue, and if the Democratic Party North desire and require the support of Democrats South, they must be prepared to concede that this is a living issue, as indeed it is regarded by nine-tenths of the Southern people."

The San Antonio (Texas) Herald thinks the Democratic Press has no higher mission than to show that the North was alone responsible for the late destructive war; and the Galveston News, believing that the people of the South do not wish to discuss the constitutionality of what has been done, says that they prefer to go back to the root, and will, sooner or later, ask for a Constitutional Convention to undo it all.

Finally, one of the leading Democratic papers of Alabama, the Montgomery Advertiser, from which we have quoted above, declares that the war made by the Radical Party of the United States against the Confederate States, is the darkest scandal in modern history; but, reading the first tidings of a sweeping Democratic success in New-Hampshire, it takes courage and says: "It seems to us as if the Great Conspiracy planned in 1858, and consummated in 1860, was about being exposed to the eyes and intelligent comprehension of the Northern masses; and that the popular vengeance might yet fall upon the traitors."

Forrester, the Alleged Nathan Murderer, in Memphis.

ST. LOUIS, March 27.—The Republican has the following special dispatch, dated Memphis, March 26: "FORRESTER, the supposed Nathan murderer, made his appearance and was recognized in this city some three weeks since, but the parties recognising him did not know he was the man wanted. He disappeared from the city a few days afterward, and simultaneously with the arrival of a St. Louis detective, and it is supposed he is now concealed somewhere in this city. The St. Louis detective is yet working the case, but with no success, as FORRESTER's pals will not make known his whereabouts. It is rumored, before leaving the city, he said if a pardon could be procured for the twelve years he is wanted in the Illinois Penitentiary, he would deliver himself to the officers and stand trial for the Nathan murder, he having no fears as to the result of that investigation.

Chicago Men Victims of the Kuklux in Mississippi.

From the Chicago Journal, March 24.

Col. ALLEN P. HUGGINS, the United States Assessor and County Superintendent of Education in Monroe County, Mississippi, was recently assaulted by 120 Kuklux, severely whipped, left in a half-killed condition, and ordered to leave the country. He has now gone to Washington to add his testimony to the desperate character of the Southern secret clan. The Colonel was formerly a citizen of Chicago, was a member of the First Congregational Church here, and was appointed Assistant State Superintendent of Education under the Freedmen's Bureau in Mississippi, and subsequently County Superintendent of Free Schools in that State. He has been active in bringing teachers to the work, and efficient in establishing the free system of education. The professed cause of the assault is the introduction of taxes upon citizens to support the schools, which is denounced as "a Yankee trick." He has a high reputation as an efficient, prudent, Christian man. The teachers have been threatened, and some of them have already been obliged to leave the country.

J. N. BISHOP, formerly a resident of this vicinity, and County Superintendent of Education in Lowndes County, Mississippi, has also been threatened with Kuklux vengeance and ordered to leave his charge.

The Razor Again—Free Slashing by a Negro.

At 11 o'clock last evening, an affray occurred at No. 24 Clarke-street, between CHARLES MOSS, JOHN MOORE and CHARLES WILSON, all colored men, during which WILSON was cut in the right cheek and on the head by MOORE, who was armed with a razor. MOSS was immediately arrested by Officer COSGROVE, of the Eighth Precinct; but MOORE fled, and was captured some time afterward on the roof of No. 19 Vandam-street by Officers RAY and SCHICK, of the Twenty-eighth Precinct. Both prisoners were locked up in the Eighth Precinct Station-house, where the wounds of WILSON were dressed by Surgeon FARLEIGH, after which he left for his home.

MISSION WORK IN THE CITY.

Annual Report of the Sunday-School and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church—Encouraging Facts and Figures.

Last evening an audience of fair proportions gathered in St. Paul's Church, corner of Fourth-avenue and Twenty-second-street, on the occasion of the anniversary of the New-York City Sunday-school and Missionary Society. Mr. A. V. STOUT, President, occupied the chair, and Mr. J. H. PELTON, Recording Secretary, was also in place. The Corresponding Secretary's report was read as follows:

1. INCORPORATION AND MEMBERSHIP.—The Society was incorporated by an act passed April 14, 1866. By its Constitution, its membership embraces all laborers in the Sunday-schools connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church in the City of New-York, together with the pastors of the several churches, and the Presiding Elders of the New-York Districts of the New-York and New-York East Conferences.

2. MANAGEMENT.—The management of the Society is vested in a Board of Managers elected annually, consisting of the officers of the Society, the pastors of the several Methodist Episcopal Churches, of one delegate from each Sunday-school, (elected by the officers and teachers of that school,) and of twenty additional members elected by the Board. The regular meetings of the Board are held on the second Friday afternoon of each month.

3. LOCAL CENTRES OF LABOR.—Sunday-school and Mission Chapel services have been conducted by the Society in Thirty-fifth-street, near Tenth-avenue; in One Hundred and fourth-street, near Ninth-avenue; at No. 156 Franklin-street, near Hudson; at No. 302 Broome-street, near Mulberry; corner of Broadway and Sixty-eighth-street; in Sixty-first-street, between Second and Third avenues; in East Eleventh-street, near Avenue B; in Sixteenth-street, near Avenue C; in Second-avenue, between Seventy-seventh and Seventy-eighth streets; in Second-avenue, near One Hundred and Tenth-street; in Rivington-street, near Lewis; and at No. 65 Allen-street, for colored members.

4. PROPERTY.—The Society now holds free from debt, real estate, consisting of chapel lots and chapels, estimated at $150,000, and movable or personal property valued at $14,000, making a total of $164,000.

5. CHURCH SOCIETIES.—There are, under the pastoral care of our missionaries, twelve organized churches, the members of which are divided into twenty-four classes, which meet weekly. During the year there have been 365 conversions at the mission meetings. The losses to the membership by death have been five, and there have been sixty-six removals by letter. The present church membership is 609. These figures show an increase of 110 members.

6. SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.—The Society has under its supervision twelve Sunday-schools, with a total register for the year of 237 officers and teachers, and 2,128 scholars, or a total Sunday-school membership of 2,365. The libraries include 2,620 volumes, an increase of 404.

7. MISSIONARIES AMONG THE WOMEN.—Eleven missionaries have been employed, namely, Revs. T. L. MARKS, J. F. RICHMOND, and WM. R. KETCHAM, of the New-York Conference, and Rev. C. S. BRIGGS, local preacher on the west side, and on the east side, Revs. WM. ROSE and WM. PLAYER of the New-York East Conference, and Revs. J. S. THOMPSON and H. S. DAVIES, local preachers; THOMAS VETCH, Exhorter, and Misses A. LOZIER and M. ROSS. The work performed by these faithful laborers is indicated by the following figures:

Missionary and pastoral visits, 41,624; visits to the sick, 2,139; families prayed with, 7,912; visits to Sunday-schools, 981; pages of tracts distributed, 152,210; funerals, 128; baptisms, 276; children promised to attend Sunday-schools, 2,876; adults promised to attend church, 2,401.

8. HELPING IN THE WORK.—In addition to the work above indicated, the cause of the Society has been largely promoted by the personal services of the President, Vice-President, and several other officers of the Board. Numerous visits, promotive of the work, have been made by them to the City Sunday-schools and congregations, and they have devoted no small amount of time in supervising and aiding the precious work under their charge. The officers and teachers of the Mission Sunday-school have also labored with zeal and directed zeal.

9. INCOME AND EXPENSES.—During the year the Society has received and expended in the Mission and Sunday-school work $40,270 45. The sources of these receipts, and the objects for which the expenditures have been made, will be fully stated in the annual report. During the last five years the Society has expended, in carrying forward its work, $126,887 72.

The following-named gentlemen were then elected officers for the next year: President, ANDREW V. STOUT, of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church; First Vice-President, CHANNCEY F. ARTHUR, of Washington-square Methodist Episcopal Church; Second Vice-President, GEO. J. HAMILTON, of Thirty-seventh-street Methodist Episcopal Church; Third Vice-President, J. MILTON CORNELL, of Central Methodist Episcopal Church; Recording Secretary, JAMES H. PELTON, of Washington-square Methodist Episcopal Church; Corresponding Secretary, ROBT. R. BUCKLEY, of Forty-second-street Methodist Episcopal Church; Treasurer, WILLIAM K. PEYTON, of Seventh-street Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Chairman introduced Rev. GEO. LANSING TAYLOR, who, in an able and effective address, referred to the purposes of the organization and the objects they sought to accomplish. Adverting to the overcrowded condition of the City, and its demoralizing influences, he attributed it solely to the foreign-born element that ruled it and the pernicious Romish tendencies they endeavored to diffuse into the minds of the American people. These opinions, he asserted, were directed to the subversion of social ethics and republican institutions, and were the worst foes the nation had to encounter. In conclusion he invited his hearers to a saint of encouragement in the cause in which they were engaged as best promotive of the doctrines of Christ.

Rev. C. C. MCCABE also spoke on the same subject, citing quotations from the addresses delivered by Catholic prelates avowing their intention of subjugating the country to the dominion of the Church of Rome. He refuted the assertion by reference to the increase of Protestantism consequent on the diffusion of the Bible, and maintained that all history proved that while adherence to the doctrines of the Papacy brought nothing but disaster to a nation, Protestantism filled it with glory and renown.

Want of space prevents us from giving a more extended notice of the addresses of the reverend gentlemen, and on their conclusion a cordial vote of thanks was passed to them.

In conformity with the action of the Legislature and the approval of the Board of Managers, it was also resolved to change the name of the Society to that of the New-York City Church Extension and Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The meeting was terminated with prayer.

The Weehawken Murder—Death of McDonough.

ANTHONY MCDONOUGH, one of the two men who were stabbed by PATRICK CUNNINGHAM at Weehawken, during Saturday night, died yesterday morning of his wounds, at his own residence. CUNNINGHAM, who was arrested on Sunday afternoon, was visited in the County Jail yesterday by a reporter, to whom he stated that he was a block-maker, and that after being paid his wages on Saturday he started toward home with a friend, named COYNE. On their way they met two strangers, who hallooed to them, and they responded, and both parties came across the street. CUNNINGHAM states that he was then struck by one of the strangers and knocked down, as well as his companion, COYNE. The strangers then walked away, and CUNNINGHAM and his friend went to a butcher's shop, where the former borrowed a knife. On going out they again met the strangers, and CUNNINGHAM threatened to let their insides out if they did not keep out of the way. Disregarding his warning, they advanced toward him, when he stabbed one in the stomach and the other in the side. He seemed not to conceive the gravity of the offence with which he stands charged. Levity and sullenness, since his incarceration, he has alternately manifested, but remorse or fear never. He wonders why he is not admitted to bail, as he could procure any amount. The accused bears a bad record, and the history of the locality is stained with the blood of four men murdered within as many years.

The Riverside Park Job—Remonstrances from Property-Owners.

The following remonstrance has been addressed to the Board of Public Parks by interested property-owners:

We, the undersigned, owning property which the Commissioners for opening Riverside Park propose to assess for the alleged improvement, appeal to your Board to protect us from the burden about to be imposed upon our property, and state the following grounds and reasons for our request:

1. That no petitions or public expression were ever made for a Park at the place where Riverside Park has been laid out.

2. That lying along the margin of the Hudson River, it itself one of nature's own parks, which gives to the public light, air, free circulation, and every other benefit of a park, except first cost for permanent grading or driving, which is supplied by the Boulevard and Central Park; hence there is no necessity or plausible reason given for devoting this mass of land to the purposes of a park can be advanced or invented.

3. That being within a moderate distance of Central Park, it offers no advantage over that park, which gives beyond those already afforded by that great and popular improvement.

4. That it takes out of a desirable portion of New-York, many acres of valuable land, which is improved, and that the City, with its circumscribed limits and rapidly increasing population, cannot afford to lose so much habitable land.

5. That it removes from commercial use nearly three miles of river front, which, with a few important exceptions, of reaching the river from this east being entirely cut off by it.

6. That the contemplated expense connected with this opening amounts to more than five and three-quarter millions of dollars; that one-half of this sum is to be assessed upon the land between Forty-second-street and One Hundred and Fifty-fifth-street, and the Ninth-avenue and Hudson River, which not one tithe of the land within these limits is in the slightest degree benefited by this opening; and this area of assessment has been adopted, as we believe, in order to spread out the burden over a large space, and the lightest amount on each square, thereby rendering it easier for the expense of property which is in no way benefited by the proceeding.

7. That the system of assessment recently adopted, and the manner in which it is being carried out, is a process of gradual confiscation of our property; it is having been within the last few years heavily assessed for opening St. Nicholas-avenue, Twelfth-avenue and Morningside Park, without any corresponding benefit.

We therefore respectfully request your Board to direct the discontinuance of the proceedings for this opening, under the authority for the same being conferred by chapter 219, of the laws of 1870, section 1, entitled "An act creating your Board, and a precedent for it being afforded by the action of the former Commissioners of the Central Park in discontinuing the proceedings in 1856 for extending Central Park from One Hundred and Sixth to One Hundred and Tenth streets.

We, the undersigned, further request a hearing in regard to the matter before your Board at some early day, in the hope that your Board will be convinced of the public necessity of rescinding the action of the late Board of Commissioners of the Central Park, as well as the propriety of your interposition to protest against, and our property from, a threatened and unjust burthen, and that we may then have time to apply to the Legislature for a law discontinuing the Park.

All which is respectfully submitted.

NEW-YORK, March 21, 1871.

Reply of the Fire Commissioners to Mr. Bergh.

The following has been sent to Mr. BERGH, as a response to his communication to the Board of Fire Commissioners:

HEAD-QUARTERS FIRE DEPARTMENT, CITY NEW-YORK, March 27, 1871.

Henry Bergh, Esq., President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals:

SIR: I am directed by the Board of Commissioners to acknowledge your note of March 24, and to say to you that the newspaper slip you inclose, like many which you have received, is no evidence to your own Department, does not correctly state the circumstances. They often necessarily derive the information from excited bystanders, which varies from evidence obtained by their officers. The truck had stopped in Maiden-lane, in front of No. 24, near the corner of Nassau-street, to allow another truck to pass down Nassau-street, and the collision was occasioned by a fruit-peddler's wagon being rapidly driven around the corner from Nassau-street into Maiden-lane. Just as it started again the truck was crowded against the sidewalk, but the only serious accident was to a boy, who jumped or fell down an area and broke his leg. The truck was not thereby, a case of reckless or even rapid driving, as you have concluded, without apparently any special inquiry. The Commissioners are in almost instantaneous communication with all parts of the districts under their charge, and in the performance of their delicate duties do not derive their intelligence from the Press, nor would you, probably, be able to invite their attention to any subjects which had not received your notice. The Board is quite sorry your reference in the Department which deviates from its rules, and especially accidents, collisions and complaints of citizens, and had this occurrence been under close and careful inquiry before you could have read the newspaper reports. The right of way in the performance of duty is given by law with a view to the rapidity of movement, which is necessary to protect the lives and property of citizens, but in using it no more is allowed to be from more rapidity than a man, who runs at its head before the horses, can make his way along the street. Of any violation of this rule they are always glad of information. You are aware of the celerity of the movements of the Department. "The remedy is worse than the disease, for it is far better that a few more pieces of timber should be consumed than that men, women and children should be crushed beneath these modern cars of Juggernaut, their efforts to reach a burning building a few moments sooner." Your practical humanity, they desire me to say, takes here but a single view of the question, and they wish to give you another—one of many they could cite. On the 16th of September, a fire occurred on the fifth story of No. 73 Montgomery-street, at 12¼ A. M., and the inmates were suddenly driven to the roof. The arrival of a ladder truck with the utmost speed was not in matter of saving "pieces of timber" but human life, and moments had the value of hours. The apparatus arrived, the ladders were used, and District Engineer RAMS rescued a child; Foreman GIGGEY, two women and two children; the men of Hook and Ladder, No. 6, four persons, and those of Engine Company No. 11, three persons from the roof, preventing a frightful conflagration. The result would have been nearly excused by the delay of the life-saving apparatus, in discussing the right of way with either the drivers of fruit wagons, carts or private carriages. Why, as you may have observed, are not hook and ladder truck, either to the means of protection or to the humane efforts of your own Department. The Commissioners are rigid in their rules and punish severely infractions; they prescribe and require all reports of accidents, and are happy to have your accidents to investigate, but they reserve the right to control this Department in the prosecution of human life and property. If you visit them at consideration with the Department more especially under your own charge, they will take pleasure in showing to you a collection of animals not to be surpassed in health and condition by those in any equal number of private stables, and a percentage of loss, by accident or death, less than in any service not subjected to great exposure and risk by day and night, which the claim as an indication of the careful grooming and driving required by their rules. They direct me to call your attention to a very amusing letter they have received from Messrs. COLBERT & CO., respectable citizens, who give a very different and correct version of the accident to which you are referred.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

CHAS. E. GILDERSLEEVE, Secretary.

The Tompkins-Square Affray Investigation by the Police Commissioners.

Commissioner BOSWORTH investigated complaints against policemen yesterday. The most interesting of the cases was that of Patrolmen MICHAEL J. FLANNELLY and HAROLD KONNECKE, Seventeenth Precinct, who were arraigned by Capt. MOUNT for failing to make any report at the Station-house of the recent stabbing affray in Tompkins-Square. That singularly dark affair was first made clear by the testimony of the witnesses. THEODORE and JULIUS BURKHARDT, with their mother, testified that they were walking with JOHN LOWIS, about 1½ A. M., of the 20th inst, and had entered Tompkins-square, when LOWIS ran against one of two men who were together. This incident brought on a fight which was short, sharp and decisive, for when FLANNELLY, who was attracted by the cry of a woman, ran into the square, only BOEF and the two men who have been arrested and known as McGUIRE and "Blinky" SHERIDAN were found there. None of these persons said anything about any one being stabbed, but on the contrary all disclaimed that anything whatever had occurred, and the officer seeing no breach of the peace, committed told them to go home, and with KONNECKE, who came up a moment later, went back to his post. Another singular circumstance was that KONNECKE went to the place in response, as he supposed, to an alarm rap, but FLANNELLY explained that the rap was the result of an accident, for as he ran into the square one club, which was dangling at his side, struck against a post. It also appeared that although both the BURKHARDTS received slight stabs in the affray, neither of them knew the fact until after they had gone several blocks, and neither gave any information at the time to the Police, but it did not clear up to appear what became of LOWIS, who was dangerously wounded, but was able to leave the ground unaided, as he was not there when FLANNELLY ran up. As a whole, it seemed from the evidence that the patrolmen knew of nothing more serious having occurred than a man having been knocked down by some unknown person, and although BOEF claimed that he had been struck by a policeman, both officers denied having even drawn their clubs while in the square. The cases were referred to the Board.

The Canal-Street Fire—Losses and Insurances.

The great disaster by fire at the corner of Canal and Mott streets, at a late hour Saturday night, which was fully reported in the TIMES of Sunday, inflicted severe losses upon the insurance companies. The names of the companies which lost by the fire could not be ascertained until a late hour yesterday, owing to the fact that the saf

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Business opened auspiciously at the Exchange yesterday, (March 27,) with the very successful sale conducted by MULLER, WILKINS & CO., at which City property belonging to the estate of JACOB DORLLAND was disposed of. Sixty lots and gores of land, together with a house and lot on Centre-street, were offered, all of which were sold—except nine small lots on Eighty-second-street, between Ninth and Tenth avenues, and a gore plot on One Hundred and Twenty-fifth-street, east of Tenth-avenue. These were publicly withdrawn by the auctioneers. The attendance at the Real Estate Rooms throughout the auction was large, and the interest manifested in the transactions decidedly healthy in its tone, the bidding being active. As to the prices realized they may be termed good, for in regard to them all is said that can be which it is stated that they were satisfactory to the owners of the property, and that the sales were bona fide. As an incident of the market, the auction furnishes additional proof of the improved condition of affairs in real estate, for the sale was an extensive one, made on the first day of the week—an unusual event—and the property offered such as to require capital to control the investment. Nevertheless, buyers presented themselves, and the result of the day's work was a gratifying one, the figures obtained, if not as high compared with those of last week, still sufficiently so as to establish confidence, at the same time indicating progress and a firm market. The particulars of the sale will be found below in the recapitulation as noted, and in the names of the purchasers appended in the detailed report, will be recognized a number who were also investors in the transactions effected last week. The value of property sold at the auction yesterday amounted in the aggregate to $[illegible].

Today, at the Exchange, a large amount of valuable property is advertised to be sold, a complete list of which was published in this column yesterday. The day should be a busy one, for there are 234 lots to be sold by direction of the following auctioneers: Muller, Wilkins & Co.; A. J. Bleecker, Son & Co.; Roberts & McGuire; N. E. Stevenson & Son; Wyckoff & Little; Bleecker & Marks; and James H. Miller.

G. LEETMANN, No. 36 Pine-street, reports having recently disposed of the following lots, at private sale: Two lots, Fifth-avenue, 50 feet south of Ninety-third-street, for $18,750 each; one lot, Fifth-avenue, 75 feet north of One Hundred and Fourteenth-street, for $8,250, and one lot on One Hundred and Fourteenth-street, 100 feet east of Fifth-avenue, for $2,800. The prices named are low.

THE ERIE TRIALS.

More Decisions Against Fisk, Gould and Company.

The Suit to Recover $1,000,000 from Vanderbilt—The Commodore Triumphant—Victory of Daniel Drew—Judge Barnard's Opinion.

The case of the Erie Railway Company against CORNELIUS VANDERBILT came up, pursuant to adjournment, yesterday, before Judge BARNARD, holding Special Term of the Supreme Court, in the room of the Board of Supervisors. It will be recollected by the readers of the TIMES that this suit was commenced by the Erie Company under the régime of FISK, Jr., and his friends, to compel CORNELIUS VANDERBILT to take back 40,000 shares of stock surrendered to the Company in a settlement made by him with it while under the management of WORK, DREW, SCHELL and others; to make up three and a half millions of dollars paid him for the 50,000 shares of stock on the transfer; and also to compel him to pay back $1,000,000 alleged to have been paid him on the same compromise over and above the market value of the stock. The trial was commenced before Judge BARNARD several months since, and early in its progress Judge BARNARD decided that he could only entertain the suit so far as it was sought thereby to recover the one million of dollars alleged to have been overpaid to VANDERBILT, and which, it was claimed by plaintiffs, had been paid without lawful authority on the part of the then Directors. After a large amount of testimony had been taken, all of which appeared in the columns of this paper at the time, Judge BARNARD adjourned the hearing until yesterday.

At the opening of the Court, yesterday, counsel for the respective parties appeared. Mr. BEACH representing the defendant, and DAVID DUDLEY FIELD the plaintiff.

TESTIMONY OF DANIEL DREW.

On the part of defendant, Mr. BEACH called DANIEL DREW, who testified as follows:

Q.—You were at the settlement at Mr. PIERREPONT's house, spoken of by Mr. GOULD and Mr. FISK in their evidence? A.—Yes.

Q.—You had had in New-Jersey bonds or the proceeds thereof belonging to the Erie Railway Company in your possession? A.—Bonds.

Q.—Bonds or money of the Erie Railway Company? A.—Yes, Sir, I had money—securities.

Q.—Did you, at that interview at PIERREPONT's, tell Mr. GOULD or Mr. FISK that that money, or any portion of that money, or of any bonds which you might convert into money, you was going to give to Commodore VANDERBILT? [Objected to as leading; not admitted.

Q.—Did you deliver any money belonging to the Erie Railway Company into the hands of Commodore VANDERBILT? A.—Never.

Q.—Did you propose, at any time, to do so? A.—Never.

Q.—Did you say, at any time, that you intended to do so? A.—Never.

Q.—At the interview at Mr. PIERREPONT's house did Mr. FISK say that it was the purpose of that interview, and did you reply that you were arranging the law suits, and did he ask you what under heaven you was arranging them for, or anything in substance like that effect? [Objected to, and ruled out.

Q.—Did you, at that time, did Mr. FISK ask you, in words or substance, what under heaven you were arranging those suits for? A.—No, Sir; I don't remember that I ever said a word about it.

Q.—Did he on that occasion tell you, in words or substance, that there were members in the Board that strongly objected to any settlement? A.—I don't remember that.

Q.—Did you at that time tell him that you had been talking with the Commodore, but did not seem to arrive at any satisfactory resolution; that you had made two or three trades, or anything to that effect? A.—I don't remember that I ever had any such conversation; I don't think there was any such conversation.

Q.—Did you tell him at that time that they—that, you and those proposing a settlement—had got a message from Vanderbilt, and could carry it through the Board? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did Mr. FISK upon that occasion tell you that he had been fighting this settlement for six or seven months, or anything to this effect? A.—No, Sir. I don't think he did.

Q.—Did he tell you this, or in substance this: "You know that for nine weeks, while I was in Jersey, that I scarcely took off my clothes to keep this money from coming into the hands of Vanderbilt, and now we should not fight that position the same then as we fought in Jersey; that we had fought against all of them to prevent this money from being taken out in any other way than by a judicial order or ruled out?" [Objected to; not ruled out.

Q.—Did you, on that occasion, come to Mr. Fisk with tears in your eyes, and ask him if he would not consent to the settlement? A.—Oh, no, Sir.

Q.—Mr. FISK states that on that occasion you came to him, and he speaks then in regard to you: "The old gentleman was a little weaker. He went on to tell what he suffered during his pilgrimage in New-York." Did you say any such thing happen? A.—No, Sir; I don't think there was any such talk at all.

By Mr. FIELD.—Q.—What did you go to Mr. PIERREPONT's house for? A.—I had a notice to meet there from the President, Mr. ELDRIDGE; I did not know when I went there what the meeting was for; I did not know it was for a settlement.

Q.—Had you no idea what it was for? A.—Well, he put up a note to meet him there, and after I got there.

Q.—No, before you got there, had you any idea of what it was for? A.—No, Sir, I can't say that I had; no, I had no idea what it was for, only to meet Mr. ELDRIDGE and some of the other people there.

Q.—Who were the other people you were to meet? A.—Some of the directors.

Q.—Who? A.—I suppose all of the directors were notified.

Q.—Do you suppose all of them were notified? A.—I suppose they were.

Q.—Who did you suppose were not notified? A.—I did not know but they were all notified; I did not know anything about that until I got there.

Q.—When you got there who did you find? A.—I think THOMPSON and ELDRIDGE were there; I know Mr. FISK and Mr. GOULD came there some little time after we got there.

Q.—I am not asking you that! A.—You asked me who was there.

Q.—No I did not; I asked you whom you found there? A.—Well, I found Mr. ELDRIDGE there, and Mr. THOMPSON was there when I got there, I think; it is so long ago I don't remember all of them.

Q.—Do you remember anybody else but THOMPSON and ELDRIDGE? A.—I remember every one was there when FISK came there.

Q.—When you got there? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Do you remember anybody else when you got there excepting these two persons? A.—I declare I don't remember; there were others there, I think; there must have been.

Q.—But you don't remember one of them? A.—No, I don't know.

Q.—Do you remember what anybody said at that meeting when FISK and GOULD came? A.—I remember that Mr. ELDRIDGE had a proposition to make—a settlement of the whole matter—the law suits and all this.

Q.—Now you remember that? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did he read that proposition or state it verbatim? A.—That I don't remember; I don't remember whether he read it from a paper. I know he stated that amount, and I know I objected to it, and stated I would not agree to any such thing.

Q.—Any such amount for a settlement? A.—No; I said I would not.

Q.—You said you would not? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you not say that you would give a million? A.—No, Sir; I did not say any such thing.

Q.—You did not say you would give a million? A.—No, Sir.

Q.—Did you not say that you would give half that amount? A.—No, Sir; I did not say any such thing.

Q.—To whom were the several hundred thousand dollars to be paid? A.—I think Mr. ELDRIDGE was to receive a certain amount.

Q.—Was any to be paid to any other person than Mr. SCHELL? A.—Yes, the receiver, I think; he was to receive a part of it.

Q.—Anybody else? A.—I can't remember; I know the amount was very large.

Q.—That is enough that you don't remember anything else; and I am content. You said that you would not agree to any such thing? A.—I did not.

Q.—Did you finally agree to it? A.—Well, I agreed that if the Board would agree to it I would do it.

Q.—Well, at that time, in one of your interviews with him? A.—Yes, I saw him several times.

Q.—What did you say in answer to that suggestion? A.—I told him I could not do that.

Q.—What did he say? A.—He said I acted very foolishly in going there, and all this; that was about all that passed between him and me.

Mr. BEACH here said he had expected to recall Commodore VANDERBILT to contradict some statements of Messrs. FISK and GOULD, but Mr. VANDERBILT had been ill with a rheumatic affection for a week; and though he had last night sent a message that he would try to be present this morning, he had sent another saying he would not be able to be down. But they did not desire so delay the trial on that account, and therefore closed the case on the part of the defense.

Mr. FIELD said he was through with his testimony.

Mr. BEACH then moved to dismiss the complaint on the grounds he had previously urged, on the merits, and on the additional ground that it appeared by the proof that the purchase of the stock from the Commodore was a portion of a legitimate compromise in settlement of doubtful claims.

Mr. FIELD presented some findings of fact which he claimed to be made out by the evidence.

JUDGE BARNARD RENDERS THE SUIT.

Mr. Justice BARNARD said: With the exception of certain portions of your sixth finding, the facts as proved upon the trial, I suppose would justly meet the approval of both parties; but they are meaningless unless I have had occasion to examine this matter very carefully, and have come to the following conclusion: I thought at that time, when the motion was made for a nonsuit, that, prima facie, the plaintiff had made out a case against the defendant to recover the sum of $1,000,000. That, however, depended upon two questions. First, the question of fraud; and, second, the question of law as to the power of the Company to compromise and make a settlement. After having examined very carefully the complaint and the answer and the testimony, I have come to the conclusion looking at the allegations in the complaint which were, and on which the right of the plaintiff to recover against the defendant is claimed, I find that it is charged that the defendant obtained stock, bonds and money amounting to some millions of dollars belonging to the plaintiff, and charged therein. Another allegation is that he obtained possession of the bonds, stocks and money by artifice, trick or fraud, or by the influence with or control over the Board of Directors, or some of them, of the Erie Railway Company; and the fear created in the minds of some of the then officers of the Company, to affect this settlement. It is alleged further in the complaint that the Company had power to make the agreement as therein set forth, and no power to enter into this compromise at all with WORK, SCHELL and the defendant; that it was in fraud of the stockholders of the Company, the making of such a settlement, and that two of the directors, GOULD and FISK, opposed it. Now, in regard to the allegation of fraud, I am utterly unable to find any, not even the slightest evidence, because it appears from the testimony that at that time the present plaintiffs were engaged in a series of expensive, long and protracted litigations. These suits were brought by different people, some of whom were controlled by the defendant, to recover money and property which they believed legally they had a right to recover, and would recover. That Company wished to get rid of these litigations and to use its property, then under injunction, and to go on with its legitimate business, and, as a means of it, the Board of Directors, duly convened, and by a majority vote thereof, fifteen out of seventeen, FISK and GOULD voting in the negative, authorized the settlement. There is no doubt, for a majority of the Board of Directors of a corporation would have power to bind the minority. I find as a meeting duly convened, of the directors, that that subject was properly brought before them, and they directed the settlement to be made. There was no fraud whatever in it, no undue influence, no control exercised. Nothing whatever was done injurious to the stockholders, but, on the contrary, it was beneficial to them. There can be no question in regard to the Erie Railroad Company having the power to retire their own stock, and to buy their bonds or their own property whenever they have the money to do so. They are specially empowered by the third section of the General Railroad act, from that provision that permits railroad companies from buying or retiring their own stock. The fact that two of the Directors, FISK and GOULD, voted in the negative against this settlement would have no material weight; that I know of—no more weight than if eight out of the seventeen had voted the same as those two men. There was no law to prevent the action of the majority being binding upon the minority, and in this light, I have come to the conclusion that this action cannot be maintained. There is no fraud proved on the part of the defendant or of any of his officers, nothing but what he had a legitimate and proper right to do, so far as the settlement was concerned. The officers of the Company had a right to settle these litigations. It was their duty to do so. It was a good settlement, and it was one that would benefit and has benefited and, I presume, will benefit the stockholders. The plaintiffs, at the time this suit was brought, were governed and controlled by a new set of officers, who thought that in the performance of their duties they should bring an action to recover for the benefit of the stockholders this large sum of money they deemed improperly subtracted from their hands. They commenced the suit in good faith, and I don't think it would be proper to punish them any more by fining them, with costs, because it seems to have been a mistake—an honest mistake on the part of the plaintiffs at the outset, when they commenced it. The complaint is therefore dismissed without costs.

Mr. FIELD—I would ask if the Court thinks it was lawful for Commodore VANDERBILT to receive $1,000,000 for settling these suits?

Judge BARNARD—I think in compromising he had a right to receive such sum of money as would compensate him for the trouble he had taken.

The Suit of Joslyn Against Fisk and Others—Judge Ingraham's Decision—The Case to Proceed in the Court of Common Pleas—The Opera-House and its Rents Still Under Attachment.

The subjoined is a decision just rendered by Judge INGRAHAM, and dissented from by Judge CARDOZO, in the case of JOSLYN vs. JAS. FISK, Jr., et al., on the removal of the suit from the Court of Common Pleas. As Judge BARNARD, in the Court below granted the removal, he could not sit in Bench, (or General Term,) and the other Judges being divided, the case goes to the Second Circuit, (Brooklyn,) for rearrangement. Meanwhile, the suit goes on in the Common Pleas, and the Grand Opera-house and its rents remain under attachment as the property of the "non-resident" FISK, Jr.:

ORLANDO W. JOSLYN et al. vs. JAMES FISK, Jr., and others.—INGRAHAM, P. J.—In this action, and four others pending in the New-York Common Pleas, and eleven pending in the Superior Court, motions were made to have the same removed into the Supreme Court. The actions of the same character against the same defendants had been commenced in this Court. The reasons stated in the affidavit on which the motion was made for the removal of the causes, were that the defendants had a good defense; that the amount of damages claimed was large; that the actions were similar in character; that the transactions took place under similar circumstances, and the grounds of defense are substantially the same; that the several actions involve difficult questions of law, and the trial will be prolonged; that five similar actions had been brought in the Supreme Court, in which one or more of the questions of law involved had been submitted to the Court but not decided, and stating also the questions of law as raised. Upon these facts the Court granted the motion removing all the causes into this Court. The plaintiffs in the actions pending in the Common Pleas appealed to this Court.

JOSEPH R. FLANDREAU, JAMES KEYES MERCALFE, for appellants; DAVID DUDLEY FIELD, for respondents.

The provision of the Code under which this motion is made, is as follows: "The Supreme Court may remove any action from any other court of record in the county where the action is pending, and in which the Supreme Court may remove into the Court from which it is removed any action pending in that court, which the trial should be had elsewhere than in the County of New-York. (Session laws 1830, ch. 320, p. 281.) The effect of these laws was to give to the Supreme Court power to remove any action in which the damages exceed $100, and any transitory action where the place of trial should be changed. This removal at that time was prohibited in actions pending in the Supreme Court before final judgment, excepting in cases in which a transitory action pending in that Court ought to be tried in another county, and in such case the Supreme Court had authority to make an order to remove the cause in the same manner as if the action was pending in the Supreme Court. (Act establishing Superior Court, Session 1828, ch. 177, p. 141.) By an act passed Session laws 1844, ch. 23, p. 20, the provisions of the last-cited statute, as contained in section 18, were extended, and made applicable to the Court of Common Pleas. After the passage of this act, no cause could be removed from either Court, except for the purpose of changing the place of trial. This continued to be the law as at the time of the adoption of the Code of Procedure in 1848. In the Code, as originally adopted, the jurisdiction of these Courts was continued as it then existed, with some additional power, but no alteration of the law as to the removal of causes was inserted therein. (Code 1848, Session laws, p. 504.) In 1849 the code was amended, and the section as it now stands was adopted. In 1854 an act relating to the Court of Common Pleas was passed, defining the jurisdiction of that Court to be among other powers to exercise in the City and County of New-York all the powers and jurisdiction now or hereafter conferred upon, or vested in the said Court, or the County Courts in their counties, and the powers and jurisdiction which were vested in the Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New-York before the enactment of the act designated as the Code of Procedure, Session Laws 1848, ch. 379, p. 495.) Whatever construction might, therefore, be given to the amended section of the Code, as passed in 1849, as limiting the jurisdiction of the County Courts in their counties, and thus to affect the jurisdiction of the Common Pleas after the passage of the act of 1854, which restored the jurisdiction of that Court as it existed prior to the adoption of the Code, at the time, as I have before remarked, the jurisdiction of the Court extended to all local actions arising within the county, and to all transitory actions, although the same may not have arisen within the county, subject to a power vested in the Supreme Court to remove any transitory action in which the trial should be had elsewhere than in the County of New-York. It seems to me, therefore, that, in regard to the New-York Common Pleas, whatever construction may be put upon the provisions of the Code as to the Superior Court, the only power which this Court possesses in removing causes from that Court is in actions where it is proper to change the place of trial from the City and County of New-York to some other county in the State. These views would dispose of the motion so far as relates to the Common Pleas, and I might leave the examination of the question here, but I am inclined to adopt the same opinion on an examination of the section on which the defendant rests his motion in the application. No authority is given to remove such causes, except under that which unites the removal with the change of the place of trial. The application is not confined to the Court in any district, but may be made to the Supreme Court, and in any district; and, if made by the Court in any district, the Court may order the action to be tried in the district where the motion is made, unless the object of the motion is confined to the change of the place of trial. There is no necessity of authority to change the place of trial if the Court has power to remove the cause generally, because after it has been removed the place of trial may be changed the same as in other actions. The section also directs that the order for removal and change of place of trial is to be made in the Supreme Court (or Vacation), and is to take effect only on filing a certified copy of such order in the office of the Clerk of the Court. Such clerk is required to transfer the papers in the cause to the Clerk of the County in which by such order the trial is ordered to be had. Unless such place of trial is designated in the order of removal, there would be no authority for the clerk to transfer the papers to any County Clerk. The portion of the order appealed from which directs the papers to be given to the Clerk of the City and County of New-York would not be a compliance with the statute, because there is no direction in the order where the trial is to be had, and which papers, filed in any other County than that in which the trial was ordered, it would not be according to the intent of the act. The fact, also, that this provision is confined to transitory actions, and the authorities cited for the proposition of law, are strong evidence of the intent of the Legislature was to confine this power to cases in which it was necessary to change the place of trial. From the expressions adverted to, I have come to the conclusion that the intention of the Legislature was to authorize the removal of such causes except upon an application showing the propriety of changing the place of trial from the City of New-York. In all other cases in which one action is brought in this Court, and one in either of the other Courts for similar causes of action, and the decision of this Court would not be binding on the other Court, nor would it be followed by them, it was the Court concerned in its exercise, I should however, be inclined to think that these Courts are as their decisions of co-ordinate authority with this Court, that appeals are to be made directly from those Courts to the Court of Appeals, in the same manner as in this Court. While I am inclined to think that the Court in which they will bring their actions that privilege should not be interfered with except in cases clearly authorized by law, and for good and sufficient reasons calling therefor.

In the present case it is proposed to take sixteen causes out of the other Courts, and to transfer them to this Court, because five causes are pending here. The same rule would have allowed the transfer of only one action when pending here. Such was, in my opinion, the intent of the statute, and the adoption of it will lead to encourage such motions to an extent which would be embarrassing to the Court and to suitors.

Another Heavy Judgment Against Erie.

It is not generally known that the Bergen Tunnel, so important to the Erie Road, has never been fully paid for. It was finished by the contractor, Mr. A. B. SEYMOUR, in December, 1860. Immediately thereupon a controversy arose between him and the Long Dock Company, otherwise Erie, about his pay. The contractor claimed that there was a large balance due him, while the Company insisted that they had over-paid him about $34,500. The contractor, in 1861, filed his bill for relief in the Court of Chancery of New-Jersey, and the suit has been "dragging its slow length along," until the 11th inst., when the Master, JONATHAN DIXON, Jr., whom it had been referred, to adjust an account between the parties, reported a balance due from the Erie Railway Company to the contractor of $39,616 93.

POTTS & LINN appeared as counsel for the contractor.

Erie and the English Stockholders.

The reference directed by Judge BLATCHFORD, in the United States Court, to be instituted before Commissioner WHITE into the claims of HEATH and RAPHAEL, the English stockholders of the Erie Railway Company to 60,056 shares of stock now in the possession of JAMES H. COLEMAN, the receiver appointed by Judge BARNARD, and alleged to have been fraudulently taken possession of by the Erie Railroad Directors, was to have proceeded yesterday. It was, however, adjourned till to-morrow morning by consent of the counsel on each side.

BROOKLYN ALDERMEN.

The Proposed Increase of the Water Rates—Interesting Message from the Mayor.

A meeting of the Brooklyn Aldermen was held yesterday afternoon, Alderman BERGEN in the chair. Among many messages from the heads of Departments was one from the Mayor, vetoing the proposed increase in the water rates, and setting forth in a pretty clear light the mismanagement that has brought the present high rate of taxation upon the city. He says:

If we intend to lessen the heavy burdens already imposed upon our city, it cannot be done by increasing the water rates. I concede that it may have the effect of making the rate of taxation appear less by not including the deficiencies which constitute the difference between the amount of water revenue and the amount of expenditures incurred on that account, but it may lead ultimately to an actual increase in the amount of taxes our citizens will be called upon to pay, the tax for water being, after all, but one of the items we have to pay annually, the same as other expenditures incurred by the City Government for our benefit. The additional charges contemplated would average about thirty-seven per cent upon those heretofore charged in this city, which have thus far been the lowest in the City of New-York. The rates in Croton rates were originally designated by the Legislature as a proper standard for our city, and very justly so in the opinion of persons conversant with the wants and requirements of both departments. Should we not, therefore, exert ourselves to the utmost to prevent the proposed increase in the rates, and save our Water Department from comparing unfavorably with that of New-York and other great cities? In 1865 the average supply of water was 9,323,899 gallons; the revenue derived therefrom was $419,126, and the running expenses amounted to $140,977, or about thirty-three per cent of the receipts. In 1870, with an average supply of water of 16,403,243 gallons, about double the amount supplied in 1865, and yet the receipts from water rents were but $342,709, nearly $200,000 less than should have been received if the collections of 1865 are taken as the criterion. Yet, if the rates in 1865 for amount of water delivered, for which nothing was received, wasted? And if so, should not a remedy at once be applied? Again, although the receipts have greatly increased, and were $323,626, about fifty-five per cent of the total receipts. No such a satisfactory explanation is given for these discrepancies should we allow the existing water-rates to be raised. Had the city been paid in 1870 for the amount of water furnished at the same rate per gallon as in 1865, all doubt as to the ability of the Water Department to sustain itself without requiring the raising of deficiencies by tax or increasing the rates would at once vanish. Taking 1865 as a basis, we would have received in 1870 about $840,000, instead of $323,626. A close examination of the reports made for those years will be found to justify me in what I have stated. In conclusion, the Mayor characterizes the Board with general mismanagement, and urges the Aldermen to insist upon a general retrenchment.

The message was ordered to be printed, and the Board adjourned.

The Latest and Most Heartless Swindle.

Some time ago a gentleman called upon Superintendent KELSO and showed a letter from a friend, living in Western Maryland, in which it was stated that a person, claiming to be a physician from the Union Hospital, New-York City, had been in that country offering to give written guarantees to cure all manner of diseases, and as his fees were moderate he had been called to a large number of cases, and among others to a child of the writer. But he had then left the neighborhood, and the child was rapidly sinking under the medicine he had left for it. Superintendent KELSO told the gentleman there was no such hospital in the City, and that as the pretended physician was most probably a heartless sharper advised him to telegraph to his friend to abandon the treatment at once, and call in some reputable practitioner.

The Police have again heard of this revolting swindle, and it has now extended its operations as far as Alabama. A lady residing in that State, being afflicted with paralysis, would have been one more victim of the scoundrel calling himself Dr. S. HOLMAN, but for the accident that she was so impressed with the representations of the advantages afforded by the Union Hospital, New-York City, under control of a European Faculty, that she determined to come North and apply at the fountain-head. This hospital purported to have Prof. J. Randolph for President and W. R. Taylor for Secretary. Both were speedily found out that they were myths, and she was thus saved. The Police are anxious that the people generally, but especially in the Southern States where these operations appear to be chiefly carried on, shall understand that this pretended physician is one of the most heartless of all Metropolitan swindlers, and it is hoped that a stop may be speedily put to his vile practices by his arrest.

Further Peace Jubilee Preparations.

Preparations on a grand scale for the approaching peace jubilee are being made by the German brewers, who are to form an entire division in the procession, for which eighteen trucks, each drawn by four horses, are to be furnished. On the first truck, heading the division, a music corps will be stationed; the next truck following will have a group representing King Gambrinus and suite. Then are to follow two wagons with malt works; then two trucks loaded with hops; further, a truck bearing a brewery in full operation; then four trucks packed with beer casks, large and small; and, then a truck from which the liquor is to be dispensed, and finally several wagons bearing the brewers, the employers as well as the employes. Some half a dozen German Social Reform societies held a convention, yesterday, when joint action was taken to assist in the celebration, and a committee was appointed to engage a music corps for the procession. The Saengerbund societies will appear in the procession with several bands of their own. The Liederkranz Society has also engaged a music corps, and is to take up a position in the centre of the German vocal organizations. The following organizations of Brooklyn have decided to join in the procession in this City: Brooklyn Saengerbund, Ringgold Horse Guard, Turn-Verein Lodge, of the order Harmonie's Sons, Atlanta Lodge, Stockton Lodge, Hanover Society, Allemania Society, Brooklyn Casino Society, Brooklyn Butchers' organization, Brooklyn Schuetzen, the vocal societies, Teutonia, Aurora, Harmonia, Concordia and Sonnlierbund, German Freemen's Society, Brooklyn Jockey Club, and Brooklyn Light Artillery, Capt. STRUBEN.

LOCAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

NEW-YORK.

Mr. A. T. STEWART has received a telegram that the bark Hunter, laden with provisions for the suffering French, arrived on Sunday morning at Havre. This vessel, which was sent at the expense of A. T. STEWART & Co., was the first to sail and the first to arrive with help from America for France.

Gen. GEORGE H. SHARPE, United States Marshal, delivered a lecture last evening, at the Church of the Epiphany, No. 120 Grand-street, on the "Last Days of the Confederacy." He reviewed the important historical events which hastened the surrender of the rebel army, and the downfall of the Confederacy; dwelt upon the sufferings and hardships to which they were reduced in their final struggle, and spoke of the victorious triumph of Gen. GRANT over the doubts and anxieties of his Generals in the great result of the movements before Richmond. The lecturer enlivened his discourse by numerous anecdotes, drawn from his experiences as chief of the Bureau of Information for the Army. Scarcity of space will not allow of a longer report of this interesting lecture, which includes the story of an eye-witness of the meeting of Gens. GRANT and SHERIDAN after the truce of Appomattox, and the incident of the surrender of Gen. LEE to Gen. GRANT. The lecture was listened to with rapt attention by the large audience, and the lecturer was frequently applauded.

FRANK L. MYLES, the alleged forger, was brought before Justice DOWLING yesterday for examination. NELSON H. LEADBEATER, of No. 60 Seventh-avenue, testified that the accused called on him and presented a check drawn on the Manhattan National Bank for $100, alleged to have been drawn by VERNON H. BROWN, in favor of E. K. WILLARD, and a penciled note from the latter asking as a favor that the check be cashed. LEADBEATER gave MYLES $20 as a temporary advance, and next day found that the note and check were forgeries. The prisoner also called on CHARLES O'NEILL, at No. 120 Broadway, with a similar request, and drew on the Broadway National Bank by G. C. KELLOGG for $250, in favor of E. H. WILLARD, and obtained the money. He subsequently received $75 from EMILE VALLETTE, of No. 22 Chambers-street, on a check for that amount purporting to have been drawn by G. C. WILLARD in favor of E. K. WILLARD. As Mr. WILLARD testified that the indorsements were forgeries, the Magistrate held MYLES for trial.

JULES VIENNOT, an advertising agent, was arrested yesterday by Capt. KENNEDY and Officer PITEMORRIS, of the Sixth Precinct, on a warrant issued by Justice HOGAN, for swindling. It appeared, when the case came before the Magistrate, that the prisoner had been employed by ANDREW CRAWFORD, of No. 146 Duane-street, Treasurer of the French Fair held in this City recently, to advertise the Fair in the City newspapers. VIENNOT wrote the advertisements and nearly all of the papers gave half the amount of their bills to the Fair, VIENNOT in his bills to the Treasurer omitted to mention the donations, and so collected the full amount, with the intention of benefiting his own pocket. He also omitted to pay any of the advertising bills rendered, so that he defrauded the newspapers and the Fair Committee out of nearly $1,000. The Magistrate held VIENNOT for trial in default of $5,000 bail.

The Fest Committee, founded by the N. E. Saengerbund Societies to arrange the details of the twelfth general Saengerfest, was in session yesterday. The Buffalo Saengerbund and the Buffalo Liedertifel, applied to be placed on the list of the prize singing societies. The Choral Union of Washington, the only Anglo American society that is to participate in the approaching Saengerfest, will be allowed to sing an English prize chorus. It was announced that at the reception concert the "Battle Hymn of Russia" is to be sung. The Music and Decoration Committees presented their financial estimates, amounting to $7,700.

Last Saturday a letter was presented to CHARLES E. TILFORD, of the firm of PARK & TILFORD, No. 112 Sixth-avenue, purporting to be signed by Mrs. E. SOOFIELD, of No. 42 West Fourteenth-street, requesting a loan of $25. Mr. TILFORD immediately perceived that it was a forgery, and, returning the letter to the messenger, refused to advance the money. The circumstance was narrated to Officer GOFFERY, of the Eighteenth Precinct, who, after considerable exertion, arrested WILLIAM SMITH, residing in Second-avenue, between Eighteenth and Nineteenth streets, with this letter and ten others of a similar nature on his person. Judge SCOTT committed him to answer, yesterday, at Essex Market Police Court.

Rev. J. G. WHITE lectured last evening in the large hall of the Cooper Institute, on "Signs of the Times." He contended that the Franco-Prussian war was the result of the sessions of the Ecumenical Council, which he said had assembled to discuss conjectural and not infallibility. Failing to overcome Protestant Germany, he boldly predicted that the Jesuitical spirit would see in America the fairest field for conquest, and, agreeably to the many declarations of leading Catholic prelates here, would exert all endeavors to possess it. The voice of the Catholic Press, and the words of Catholic ecclesiastics, were plain and unmistakable in regard to their intentions.

At a late hour yesterday afternoon Deputy United States Marshals CROWLEY and KENNEDY, at the instance of Messrs. SALOMON & BURKE, attorneys for the Consul of the Kingdom of German States, armed with a warrant issued by United States Commissioner KENNETH G. WHITE, proceeded down the Bay to meet the steamer Silesia, coming in from Hamburg, and upon boarding her at once arrested one GUSTAVE ADOLF RODEN, an alleged fugitive from Saxony, charged with the crime of forgery. He declares that he is innocent. He was looked up in Ludlow-street Jail.

The steamer Granite State, from Hartford for New-York, before reported ashore on the rocks at Hallett's Point, Hell Gate, was successfully floated off yesterday morning at 3 A. M. The wrecking steamer John Fuller was engaged in pumping on her from the time she struck Saturday morning, thereby saving her from breaking in two by preventing her filling her with water on the rising tide. On Sunday afternoon three additional pumps were put on board by the Coast Company's steamer, under the personal charge of Capt. MERRITT the wreck was taken off and placed on the Great Bridge Dock yesterday at 4 P. M.

The Metropolitan Hotel was on Saturday, placed under the charge of the Sheriff, on an execution issued, it is said, at the direction of Mr. A. T. STEWART, the proprietor of the building. The guests were notified to leave, and by 3 o'clock yesterday were all gone. Mr. WM. M. TWEED has leased the hotel for a term of five years at an annual rental of $50,000 for the first two, and $65,000 for the remaining three years. His son, RICHARD, will be installed as the proprietor, and Mr. ABRAHAM [illegible], the manager of the Delavan House in Albany, will assume entire charge.

Hon. JOHN BEHRENS, chief executive of the International Union of Hammate and Blacksmiths in North America, addressed before a large number of the craft in Germania Assembly Rooms last evening, on the advantages of union among mechanics and working men. He opposed strikes as ruinous to trade, except as a last resort. By co-operation and unity of action every thing could be accomplished for the working man in America.

The weather has been exceedingly capricious for the past thirty-six hours. A cold, damp drizzle set in yesterday afternoon, followed by quite a snow flurry, the ground being covered to the depth of half an inch. A cold, raw wind prevailed in the City, and a brisk gale in the Harbor and Sound, with high tides, and inundated lowlands.

Ground was broken yesterday for the new Central Park Hotel, at the corner of Fifth-avenue and Fifty-ninth-street, under the direction of the builder, James [illegible]. The new structure will occupy the entire block, and, it is estimated, will cost nearly $1,000,000. It is expected the building will be completed within a year. Major W. W. LEAKE will be the proprietor.

Eggs in the City are now bought at corner groceries thirteen and fifteen for twenty-five cents. The well-known potency of such institutions leads to the belief that we Metropolitans can purchase at a much lower figure, and yet ten cents a piece is an average charge to customers. One into ten goes a sufficient number of times to solve the mystery of many a New-York restaurateur's success.

The old Custom-house, at the Battery, has been terribly battered by the winds and storms of the past Winter. As we look at it, on its skeleton foundation, whitened by the tide eddying round the piles, while the wind whistles angrily about it, as if suggesting that it had lived too long, we may well say it seems to be "on its last legs."

In the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, THOMAS WRIGHT, a colored porter who pleaded guilty on the 14th inst. to the charge of manslaughter in the third degree, in causing the death of JOSEPH FLYNN, was sentenced by Judge BEDFORD to two years and six months imprisonment.

PERDUE, convicted and sentenced to death for setting fire to the ship Robert Edwards, is to be removed from Ludlow-street Jail to the Tombs, there to be confined in a cell in Murderers'-row, to await the execution of his sentence.

A TIMES reporter, (who is not in training to match WESTON,) during a brisk walk up Broadway, from Bowling-green to Pearl-street, yesterday afternoon, overtook a man. Moral—Don't get into a stage when you are in a hurry.

BROOKLYN.

A young man named DAVIS, son of Capt. DAVIS, coal-dealer at Greenpoint, met with an accident yesterday morning at his residence on Grove-street, which resulted in his death. It appears that he had gone to the cistern to draw a pail of water, and while stooping to do so, he slipped and fell upon the curb at the side of the cistern, striking upon the lower part of the abdomen. Medical assistance was at once procured but it was unavailing. He died in great agony.

Mr. W. A. YOUNG, the representative of the Cruelty to Animals Society in Brooklyn, has been making a raid on the carriages of the "upper ten," seeking for the "bit-burr" or "needle-pad." His exertions were not in vain, inasmuch as he captured six of these infernal instruments on carriage-horses belonging to some of the gentry residing on Columbia Heights and elsewhere. This phase of cruelty is still practiced in the City of Churches. YOUNG removed two needle-pads from the bits of a magnificent bay horse on Saturday, the owner of which was entirely ignorant of his coachman's having obtained them from the harness-maker. John received a good "setting down" for his daring to use such instruments on the horse.

The Union Ferry Company are about to build a large wooden building at the foot of Fulton-street, Brooklyn, and also two additional ferry-slips. The work, it is said, will commence on the 1st of April, and when completed, the building will be the longest and finest ferry-house on that side of the river.

Miss JULIA COLMAN, of Brooklyn, will deliver her able and instructive lecture, entitled "Intemperance One Heartache," in the Presbyterian Church, Noble-street, Greenpoint, this (Tuesday) evening, under the auspices of Golden Circle Lodge No. 14, Independent Order of Good Templars.

County Judge JAMES TROY, County Clerk GEO. G. HERMAN, and THOMAS A. GARDINER, County Treasurer, met yesterday in their official capacity and appointed WILLIAM J. OSBORNE, Supervisor of the Sixth Ward, to the office of Supervisor as large. Mr. OSBORNE has for the last two years been President of the Board.

Coroner WHITEHILL commenced an inquest, yesterday afternoon, in the case of DENIS MCCORMACK, who was shot on Saturday night by GEORGE NEEF, the proprietor of a Greenpoint lager-beer saloon. The inquest was adjourned until to-morrow evening.

The deputy marshals who served the United States at the last election have not yet received their pay, and are now beginning to make a noise about the delay. They believe that some one is bent upon swindling them.

SILVIA MILLARD, who was convicted in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, on Saturday last, of manslaughter in the third degree, was sentenced by Judge TAPPAN to two years' imprisonment.

LONG ISLAND.

For over a month the bill indorsed by every member of the Queens County Board of Supervisors but one, and supported by every locality in Queens County excepting those interested in having the Court-house located in their own limits, has been slumbering in the Senate Committee to whom it was referred. In the meantime, a broken-down establishment, called a Court-house, disgraces the county.

NEW-JERSEY.

Some time since the Board of Aldermen of Jersey City gave permission to the Pavonia Horse Car Railroad Company to temporarily lay tracks on South Second and Third streets, while the regular route through North First-street was obstructed by street and sewer improvements. When the latter were completed the Pavonia Company neglected to return to their former line of travel. They were notified several times by the Board of Aldermen of this breach of courtesy, and excess of privilege, but no heed was taken by them of the remonstrances of the City Fathers. At length Alderman SHEERAN, acted on the authority of the Common Council, collected a number of his men and commenced to tear up the track on South Third-street, under the protection of a squad of Police, but the work of demolition had not proceeded far, when the Superintendent of the road Company, Mr. McIVROSS, served an injunction on Alderman SHEERAN, which he had previously procured in anticipation of this trouble. The injunction puts an embargo on further proceedings on either side until the 3d of April, when the Chancellor will decide the case.

Last evening the stable of AUGUST STEUGEL, on Bank-street, Newark, was damaged by fire to the extent of $2,000.

ARMY AND NAVY RECORD.

WASHINGTON, March 27.—Lieut.-Commander Robert Boyd, jr., has been ordered to an examination for promotion.

Commander S. P. Quackenbush has been detached from the
